After gaining experience hosting shows for a few different networks like Rogers, Global and The Score Television Network; she auditioned for The Weather Network, and the rest is history. As a highly respected and experienced broadcaster we all look up to Tom in awe. Before that he spent 19 years with the Toronto Transit Authority as their media communications and traffic commuter expert. With traffic cameras at his fingertips Tom monitors hundreds of emergency communications and transit operations to provide viewers with the latest conditions for their daily commute. Her passion for communication, meteorology, news and lifelong learning make a winning combination for this broadcaster. Jaclyn is part of the Storm Chasers team driving all over tornado alley bringing us reports of volatile weather patterns. Kevin combines his formal broadcast training and likeable personality to help viewers figure out what to wear that day. Always interested in television and movies as a kid, broadcasting was a natural progression to focus his energy. Growing up in Unionville the record breaking blizzard of had a tremendous impact on Kevin and solidified his fascination with the weather. After dabbling in the insurance world Kevin returned to school and get his degree in Journalism from Ryerson. Her warm personality and trusted delivery make her a favourite with viewers. From there she attended Niagara College to fine tune her radio and television skills. His diverse and creative background plus his love of telling stories makes him a unique meteorologist. Not sure where he wanted his career to go after university, Gary pursued his artistic skills at a photography agency as a shooter. That opened the door to a long career as a model, then some acting in television commercials. Realizing a potential career in media, Gary went back to school to study Broadcast Journalism at Centennial College. From the top media market in Canada to the top media market in America and the world, NBC scouted Gary in , which is when he went off to work in the Big Apple. Previously Arda was a sports reporter with Global News Toronto and co-host of the daily lifestyle program, Daytime. A broadcaster was born. Ask anyone who roamed the hallways with her in the Broadcasting Radio and Television program at Niagara College, it was well known that this was her planned destination. That is why she was so ecstatic when she became a part of The Weather Network team in as a traffic reporter for Beat the Traffic. Although she loves helping you avoid getting stuck in a jam, she also knows the weather story is incredibly important to Canadians and is looking forward to sharing it with you. Krissy knows all about the changing weather after spending 2 years working onboard cruise ships, which often meant waking up in a different part of the world daily. There is no denying Krissy has been seriously bitten by the travel bug having already visited 29 countries. In her words she still has the rest of the world to go! In her spare time she loves spending time outdoors during the warmer months , hitting the gym and making memories with friends and family. This led to multiple hosting and commercial gigs for organizations like the Grey Cup, VacationsCanada. She says, "The weather is perfect. Not too cold and not too warm. Her passion for connecting with people led her to a career in broadcasting. While completing her degree, she did an internship at CTV and worked alongside prominent news anchors, including Lisa Laflamme and Scott Laurie. For the following two years, Farah volunteered for Rogers TV, where she was a writer, videographer, editor and on-air host, covering everything from the local entertainment scene to the municipal elections. Her desire to propel forward led her to the green screen world of The Weather Network. For Farah, the greatest reward is giving people the forecast to help them plan and prepare their day. She then went on to work as a reporter in both Sudbury and Windsor - talk about temperature extremes! Most recently, Saphia spent three years with CityTV and covered everything from crime scenes to parades while working on-air in the big smoke. We love her so much we brought her back in front of the green screen in where she is committed to bringing you her best. Deb spent several years in sports media including covering two Olympic Games, for the Olympic Broadcast Services. She soon became a member of the news team, working as a Videographer, writing and producing. She also co-hosted a lifestyle show at the station. Her experience in television began at Rogers TV. There, she was a volunteer working on the set of daytime Toronto, a live lifestyle magazine program. She also volunteered behind the scenes for sports mobiles, including coverage of Toronto FC. But broadcasting came naturally to the nerdy kid who gave amateur play-by-plays at road hockey games on his street and Blue Jays home games. Chris went on to attend Second City Comedy Improv School in Toronto, then formed a comedy troupe that toured for five years. While working at the Meteorological Office in Jamaica Nadine tried out for an on-air presenter position at Television Jamaica and well, the rest is history! He feels privileged to bring the weather to Canadians every day and his energy is contagious! He was the first on our network to stream live videos of a tornado, avalanches and hurricanes. He jumps at the chance to go down to Tornado Alley during the height of tornado season, most recently reporting the devastation moments after a tornado touched down in Moore, OK. Mark was there for the most destructive hurricane in US history; Katrina. In her junior year she was an intern with CBS in Boston where she found her calling for broadcasting and working in a TV newsroom. Clair school of TWN training. She graduated from the Broadcast Journalism program at Seneca College. Before that he held various positions within the broadcast industry, including on-air, research and management. Martin leads a team of 30 meteorologists who provide custom graphics, forecast products and consultation services for television, web and numerous commercial clients across Canada. He has also been quoted in many newspapers. Additionally, Martin was responsible for the planning and management of the installation of lightning sensors and operation of our national lightning detection network. He has also completed studies in radio and television. Previously, Mike was the host of a variety of shows for Rogers TV. In , he worked as the editor of two weekly newspapers in Kitchener-Waterloo and Guelph where Mike was also the host of a weekly web video series called The Review Chronicles. No surprise this people person made a career in broadcasting. She covered news, community events and entertainment both as a videographer and a reporter. Some of her fondest memories living in Alberta include hiking in the Kananaskis, camping even when it was snowing! Kelsey cites musical theater as her first love, and still dreams of being on Broadway one day. Kelsey is thrilled to be able to show Canada what her province has to offer! When not at work or studying for school, you can find Kelsey spending time with her husband and family. She adores penguins, and is learning to knit! Before joining the team Nathan worked as a video journalist at CTV in Halifax and taught English in Korea and directed a short documentary about life at an English kindergarten in the Gangnam neighborhood of Seoul. After landing an internship at Global News in Halifax his start got cut short when he was diagnosed with the mumps. CTV called wanting to interview Nathan due to a mumps outbreak and he agreed under the condition that his resume be forwarded to the News Director. Mais elle ne veut surtout pas rater son rendez-vous tous les week-ends avec vous entre midi et 17h You can see Chris during special interviews and active weather coverage. Prior to his current position, Chris co-anchored the prime-time television slot at The Weather Network for four years and has been featured as an expert on Canada AM and Discovery, and has been interviewed for numerous radio shows and newspapers. Rachel joined the "family" in as a news writer but quickly showed her on camera affinity and broadcast prowess. Since the age of 12 Rachel has been telling friends and family she wanted to be a presenter and started volunteering at Rogers TV as a weather and field reporter.

California Office of Emergency Services Director Mark Ghilarducci complained to the Army that contractors it paid by the ton to clear debris took too much dirt and damaged or removed perfectly fine driveways, retaining walls and the like after the wine country fire that destroyed thousands of homes. In October, state and local officials lacked the resources to quickly clear still-smoldering toxic debris from 4, homes destroyed by a wildfire in and near Santa Rosa. So the Army was called in. The hauling companies were paid by the ton. The more they hauled, the more they earned. The first complaints started almost as soon as the first dump truck was loaded in November. Homeowners said workers dug too deep and took too much dirt from their lots. Driveways, retaining walls and sidewalks that had not been damaged ended up damaged or removed, the homeowners said. By the summer, nearly 1, homeowners had flooded the Army, state and local officials with complaints. After contractors hauled away 2 million tons 1. Director Mark Ghilarducci said the Office of Emergency Services has spent millions repairing the damage, and more work remains. In a letter last month to the Army, Ghilarducci demanded that the Army reimburse the state and come back to California to fix the lots still in need of repair. Army Corps last month. Corps spokesman Mike Petersen said no evidence of fraud has been reported. Ghilarducci also argued the U. Hill Construction did not return phone calls seeking comment. Petersen said conditions varied widely at the 4, properties U. Army contractors cleared in four counties, and some sites required extensive digging to remove contaminated soil. Army Corps of Engineers is a major Army command, composed of about 37, civilian and military personnel. Petersen said it was one of the biggest cleanup jobs after a natural disaster for the Corps, which is routinely called in after hurricanes and earthquakes but lacks experience with wildfires. Government Accountability Office concluded in a report released last month. Most complaints about the cleanup come from Santa Rosa residents and other Sonoma County residents where the wildfire struck an urban center. She said contractors needlessly removed an undamaged driveway and dug so deep on her lot that they damaged water pipes.
