February 14, Joshua Davis 0 Comments A Fortress, Fort or Stronghold were constructions and buildings designed for specifically defending a region. Humans have been constructing defensive works and walls to keep themselves and their communities safe for thousands of years. In Medieval times, nobility built castles a fortified place of residence for an important lord or nobility through which they controlled the areas surrounding them. The castle and its grounds were the base from which they sent raids and defended themselves. The whole formed a community. In modern times, Gated Communities might be seen as being similar to that walled in communities, even though the dangers faced are quite different. The reasons why gated communities are created are not always because of actual dangers that need to be conquered, but it serves different types of circumstances in different situations. There are different motivations for the need to create gated communities. These motivations also differ between different countries. There are countries that do not have a lot of gated communities, for instance, Australia, Canada, and United Kingdom, etc. Reasons for Gated Communities: China; most of the gated communities in China, like in most parts of the world, cater for the rich. Many foreigners also chose to live in gated communities. The intent of gated communities in China is to reduce crime and increase the order and safety of the public. India; have many gated communities and neighbourhoods. Mostly they are created for upper-class and upper-middle-class, and the very wealthy. Although, ethnicity, also play a big part in the many gated communities. People with the same background feel more comfortable together. Mexico; gated communities are a result of a very large income-gap that exists in the urban area. The close proximity of poverty and wealth created a high-security risk. Brazil; has many gated communities throughout Rio de Janeiro. One of the first big projects for gated communities was constructed in Sao Paulo during the military dictatorship in the s. The city experienced steep increases in taxes and faced poverty, rising crime levels, downtown decay and rural exodus. Argentina; have many gated communities, especially in Buenos Aires. In the s, with the consolidation of liberal reforms, gated communities became important for people to try to cope with the high levels of criminal and violent activity. Peru; has quite a few gated communities situated in, mostly, the wealthy districts. These are home to a lot of prominent Peruvians. Saudi Arabia; expatriate workers are provided with company-housing and are required to there. Tight military security is established for the compounds that house big western populations. There are differences in the motivations and reasons for gated communities in each part of the world. Safety and security play a big factor in most of the communities, however, for some; it will always be for the status and a symbol of wealth.

View the full resolution version of this map. Defined borders are a relatively new concept in many parts of the world. In fact, until the latter half of the 20th century, most of the world was still wide open territory with loosely or completely undefined borders. On the European continent, however, jurisdiction over territory has been a fact of life for thousands of years. In other cases, there are more concrete remnants. For example, over 3, miles 5, km of simple frontier fortifications – known as limes – marked the edges of the Roman Empire at its greatest extent in the 2nd century. Over time, as territorial jurisdiction changed hands through war, marriage, and other arrangements, the map has been redrawn countless times. Even today, borders are far from set in stone. Belgium and the Netherlands recently swapped land in order to simplify an overly complex piece of their border along a river. Also, India and Bangladesh worked together to solve a notoriously complicated situation involving enclaves within enclaves. PisseGuri82, acknowledging the extreme complexity of the undertaking, outlined some caveats to consider: Here are some highlights from the map: Static Spain In contrast to the patchwork of territories left in the wake of the Holy Roman Empire, the southwest part of Europe has remained remarkably static. The Portugal–Spain border has been in place since War and Pieces Many of the oldest borders in the world were established by treaties following a war. One particularly noteworthy example is the border between Iraq and Turkey, which was established by the Treaty of Zuhab following the sack of Baghdad by the Ottoman Empire. This is especially apparent in Africa, where many existing borders still resemble those haphazardly set by colonial powers around the turn of the 20th century. The average border on the continent is only years old. We have been giving away mountains and rivers and lakes to each other, only hindered by the small impediment that we never knew exactly where the mountains and rivers and lakes were. For example, South Sudan has numerous border conflicts with neighbors; a situation that is complicated by the presence of natural resources. Ice Slices There are seven sovereign states with pie-slice-shaped territorial claims in Antarctica. There is currently a treaty in place that preserves freedom of scientific investigation and bans military activity on the continent. The Yemen–Saudi border was only officially demarcated in the year , and a 1, miles 1, km border fence soon followed. Where will lines Shift next? Where there is a war and upheaval, border changes often follow. Breakaway states – an independent Catalan state, for example – are always a possibility as well. For now, the most likely changes to borders will continue be minor adjustments to fix lawless gaps between nations. These corrections are rarely easy to negotiate, but irregularities, like the one that led to founding of Liberland , can cause even bigger headaches for governments and local officials. Most lots are small enough to be mapped as if they are flat, in spite of the curvature of the earth. A characteristic of the size of a lot is its area. The area is typically determined as if the land is flat and level, although the terrain of the lot may not be flat, i. Lots can come in various sizes and shapes. To be considered a single lot, the land described as the "lot" must be contiguous. Two separate parcels are considered two lots, not one. Often a lot is sized for a single house or other building. Many lots are rectangular in shape, although other shapes are possible as long as the boundaries are well-defined. Methods of determining or documenting the boundaries of lots include metes and bounds , quadrant method , and use of a plat diagram. Use of the metes and bounds method may be compared to drawing a polygon. Metes are points which are like the vertices corners of a polygon. Bounds are line segments between two adjacent metes. Bounds are usually straight lines, but can be curved as long as they are clearly defined. When the boundaries of a lot are not indicated on the lot, a survey of the lot can be made to determine where the boundaries are according to the lot descriptions or plat diagrams. Formal surveys are done by qualified surveyors , who can make a diagram or map of the lot showing boundaries, dimensions, and the locations of any structures such as buildings, etc. Such surveys are also used to determine if there are any encroachments to the lot. Surveyors can sometimes place posts at the metes of a lot. The part of the boundary of the lot next to a street or road is the frontage. Developers try to provide at least one side of frontage for every lot, so owners can have transportation access to their lots. As the name implies, street frontage determines which side of the lot is the front, with the opposite side being the back. Sometimes minor, usually unnamed driveways called alleys , usually publicly owned, also provide access to the back of a lot. When alleys are present, garages are often located in back of a lot with access from the alley. Also when there are alleys, garbage collection may take place from the alley. Lots at the corners of a block have two sides of frontage and are called corner lots. Corner lots may have the advantage that a garage can be built with street access from the side, but have the disadvantage that there is more parkway lawn to mow and more sidewalk to shovel snow from. In areas with large blocks, homes are sometimes built in the center of the block. In this situation, the lot will usually include a long driveway to provide transportation access. Because the shape is reminiscent of a flag the home on a flag pole the driveway , these lots are called flag lots. Development and use[ edit ] Local governments often pass zoning laws which control what buildings can be built on a lot and what they can be used for. For example, certain areas are zoned for residential buildings such as houses. Other areas can be commercially, agriculturally, or industrially zoned. This is in addition to building codes which must be met. Also, minimum lot sizes and separations must be met when wells and septic systems are used. In urban areas, sewers and water lines often provide service to households. There may also be restrictions based on covenants established by private parties such as the real estate developer. There may be easements for utilities to run water, sewage, electric power , or telephone lines through a lot. Vacant lot, with fencing Something which is meant to improve the value or usefulness of a lot can be called an appurtenance to the lot. Structures such as buildings , driveways , sidewalks , patios or other pavement, wells , septic systems , signs, and similar improvements which are considered permanently attached to the land in the lot are considered to be real property, usually part of the lot but often parts of a building, such as condominiums , are owned separately. Such structures owned by the lot owner s , as well as easements which help the lot owners or users, can be considered appurtenances to the lot. A lot without such structures can be called a vacant lot, urban prairie, spare ground, an empty lot, or an unimproved or undeveloped lot. Many developers divide a large tract of land into lots as a subdivision. Certain areas of the land are dedicated given to local government for permanent upkeep as streets and sometimes alleys for transportation and access to lots. Areas between the streets are divided up into lots to be sold to future owners. The blocks between streets and the individual lots in each block are given an identifier, usually a number or letter. Land originally granted by the government was commonly done by documents called land patents. Deeds specify the lot by including a description such as one determined by the "metes and bounds" or quadrant methods, or referring to a lot number and block number in a recorded plat diagram. Deeds often mention that appurtenances to the lot are included in order to convey any structures and other improvements also. In front of many lots in urban areas, there are sidewalks , usually publicly owned. Beyond the sidewalk, there may sometimes be a strip of land called a road verge , and then the roadway , being the drivable part of the road.

August 30, Who are refugees and displaced persons? They are men, women and children fleeing war, persecution and political upheaval. They are uprooted with little warning, enduring great hardship during their flight. They become refugees when they cross borders and seek safety in another country. They are displaced when they are forced to flee their homes, but remain within the borders of their native country. The United Nations Convention relating to the Status of Refugees, as amended by its protocol defines a refugee as a person who "owing to a well-founded fear of being persecuted for reasons of race, religion, nationality, membership of a particular social group, or political opinion, is outside the country of his nationality, and is unable to or, owing to such fear, is unwilling to avail himself of the protection of that country They are specifically excluded from the protection accorded to refugees. See a list of famous refugees through the ages. What is the difference between a refugee and a migrant? Refugees are forced to flee their homes and seek safety in another country, often times without warning. Migrants are people who make a conscious decision to leave their countries to seek a better life elsewhere. Learn more about the difference between refugees, migrants, immigrants and asylum-seekers. How many refugees and displaced persons are there, and who makes up the majority of the refugee population? Half of all refugees are children. What are the options for resettlement? Most refugees and displaced persons return to their communities when peace and stability return to their country. When conditions in countries of origin remain unstable or there is a danger of persecution upon repatriation, some refugees are able to stay in a refugee settlement in another country. Unfortunately, many host countries are unable to accept refugees permanently. The United States has a tradition of offering refuge to those fleeing persecution and war. How many refugees have the opportunity to resettle? Very few refugees are ever even considered for resettlement. There are three internationally accepted durable solutions for refugees: Refugees return to their former country of nationality when conditions prevail that allow return in safety and dignity; Local integration. Local settlement and integration of refugees in their country of first asylum upon receiving agreement from the host country; Resettlement. Most frequently used for refugees whose life, liberty, safety, health or human rights are at risk in the country where they have sought refuge. Resettlement to a third country becomes the primary objective or priority when there is no other way to guarantee the legal or physical security of the refugee. How does the U. The President in consultation with Congress determines the authorized target for refugee admissions through a Presidential Determination. How do refugees make it to the United States? Refugee Admissions Program through U. USCIS officers travel to the country of asylum to interview refugees who fall within the priorities established for the relevant nationality or region. What happens to refugees when they come to the United States? Refugees must rebuild their lives from traumatic and tragic circumstances. The majority embrace their newly adopted homeland with tremendous energy and success. They go on to work, attend universities, build professions, purchase homes, raise children and contribute to their communities. Ultimately refugees obtain citizenship and become fully participating members of society. Many refugees come to the United States without any possessions and without knowing anyone. Other refugees come here to be reunited with family members. All refugees receive limited assistance from the U. We help refugees find housing, learn about life and customs in America, secure jobs, learn English, and become citizens. We provide most of the basic things they need to restart their lives here and we help them overcome cultural barriers so that their adjustment is as easy as possible. country are different from those of other immigrants. Often in fleeing persecution, they are without the luxury of bringing personal possessions or preparing themselves for life in a new culture. Recognizing this fact, the federal government provides transitional resettlement assistance to newly arrived refugees. How can I help refugees? Everyone can help refugees by welcoming them as new and valuable members of American society. You can help refugees by volunteering at a local resettlement agency, becoming an English tutor, a tour guide, a mentor to a family, donating money, furniture and household items, teaching other people about refugees, and employing or encouraging local businesses to employ refugees. Find volunteer opportunities at the IRC office nearest you. Read about more ways to help refugees. The International Rescue Committee does not conduct direct refugee resettlement. The UNHCR will determine if your case qualifies for resettlement to any of the international resettlement countries, including the United States.
