Chapter 1 : Homework helpers word searches – Simplicity AI

Word searches, grades k - 1 - google books result Dear Adult, Welcome to the Homework Helpers series! And congratulations on choosing the best in.

Follow-through Responsibility Keep in mind that you and your child are laying an important foundation that will guide his routines for years to come. Starting in early elementary school years, each child begins to establish habits for time management and task completion. Preliminaries Location Establishing a consistent workspace is a critical beginning. The precise location for doing homework does not matter as long as it is free from distractions. For example, trying to read a chapter in the middle of the kitchen while a parent makes dinner and siblings run in and out creates a recipe for failure. In the early grades, you and your child should select the homework location together, identifying a place where you can be close by and available for help. As the child matures, he can be more independent in selecting his own workspace. Supplies At the beginning of each school year, help your child create his own Homework Survival Kit with the necessary supplies. Children should learn to take care of the supplies in their Homework Survival Kit, therefore sharing is not advisable. Your child, even at age five, should have a large calendar with enough space to note their assignments. This is a critical habit that students will need to use through high school and college. Lighting and posture Use of an appropriate writing posture should be encouraged. Therefore, a desk and chair of appropriate size are necessary. The desk should have adequate lighting. Some children enjoy reading in a different position, while in a beanbag chair, for example. Ensure that there is also adequate lighting by the location. General environment Keeping in mind that each student may have different needs and preferences, following are some ideas to help students enhance their ability to focus while doing homework: Quiet or soft background music Silence Small crunchy snacks, sour candy, or chewing gum Carbonated beverages preferably without sugar Basic strategies One of the best gifts that we can give to our students is an appreciation of and ability to use strategies. Strategies enable us to pre-plan and organize activities and tasks. We use strategies to pull in our processing strengths while compensating for processing weaknesses. This ability is very beneficial in a wide range of situations throughout our lives. Some strategies are obvious, such as mnemonic phrases. The mnemonic "Never Eat Shredded Wheat" can help students remember directions in sequence: Other strategies are less obvious. For example, if you have dinner plans for 6 p. You also need to determine how long it will take you to get ready so you know when to start preparing. It can be used in planning any project. As we help our students use strategies, we may initially need to model how to use the strategy and provide practice. The end goal is for students to develop independence in automatically using strategies. No two people have the same learning style and every individual is a unique combination of strengths and weaknesses. Therefore, a strategy that is extremely beneficial for one student may not be useful for another. In developing a toolbox of strategies, parents can help their students learn when and how to select the appropriate tool. Some valuable resources for tools can be found in the books noted in the References section at the end of this article. Organization Some ideas for helping your student organize his book bag or backpack follow. Use different colored folders for different subjects. Have a special place for papers that need to come home. Have a special place for papers that will be returned to the teacher. Develop a consistent routine for your child to replace homework in the appropriate spot in the book bag immediately upon completing it. Have a specific place for your child to place the book bag when it is ready to return to school and encourage your child to use this location consistently. Praise your child for following through with the routine. Understanding the task Review the basic assignment with your child to ensure that she understands what is required. Many children miss the overall message or global concept. Visual organizers, also called mind maps, are very efficient in presenting the global view in a concrete visual manner. Below is an example of a visual organizer comparing frogs and toads. It identifies some characteristics of each, as well as characteristics similar to both. A comparison mind map provides a global view in a visual format In previewing the assignment with your child, be alert to his understanding of vocabulary used. Misinterpreting vocabulary words is a frequent source of frustration for students. Many books describe various forms and use of graphic organizers, including those listed in the References section, below. Fatigue issues Students may often interpret feelings of fatigue as boredom or a desire to escape the situation. There are many different types of fatigue and, consequently, many reasons for it. Exploring the reasons is beyond the scope of this article. However, it is helpful to have some basic strategies in a "Parent Tool Kit. Provide a break that requires hard pressure called proprioceptive pressure , such as chair push-ups, stretching, lifting a pile books. Allow for a controlled movement break such as walking to another table to sharpen a pencil. Provide a visual break to help relax eye muscles which may fatigue with excessive bookwork by asking your child to look out the window at a distant target, count to five, and return to task. Allow your child time for "vegging out" between tasks, perhaps with a short snack. It is helpful to use a timer that rings to indicate the end of the break. Prioritize areas of emphasis: Some children experience substantial fatigue with the process of writing. One suggestion from The Source for Dyslexia and Dysgraphia is to include exercising and stretching the fingers for a few minutes before and during the task. Use of technology can compensate for fatigue as well as many other writing issues. Monitor the amount of time your child spends on homework. In some cases, you may wish to suggest that you limit homework to a certain amount of time and that the teacher give your child credit for what was actually completed. In other situations, it may be advisable to decrease the amount of homework, such as having your child complete only the odd problems on a math page. Encouragement One of the most valuable tools for parents is the tool of encouragement. Prioritize areas of emphasis. Provide occasional short nonverbal reinforces, such as a kiss on the cheek, a pat on the shoulder, a smile, or bringing a beverage or piece of gum. If your child continues to ask you for help even though you are confident that the task is within his skill level, you can play a game with him. Begin by placing 10 pieces of candy in a bowl. Tell him that every time he asks you for help, he will give you one piece of candy. When the candy is gone, you will not help any more. Assure him that he will keep whatever pieces of candy remain in the bowl at the end of the homework time. When playing this game with your child, be sure that the task is within his ability to work on his own. You may vary the number of pieces of candy, depending on the task. Another important component of encouragement is to provide statements of demystification. Use concrete statements to emphasize strengths, such as: This may get them into trouble or cause them to do schoolwork too fast and carelessly. Sometimes you are like these kids because you do things too quickly. As parents and teachers, we need to listen to our children about this very critical point. Motivation Some children need external motivators to help maintain focus on the task. Some useful suggestions include homework contracts, devices to help monitor time on task, or rewards. It is important that you are setting realistic goals for your child and that they are not overly stressed in their area of learning disability. Some children, for example, take longer to write by hand or to calculate sums so you need to be realistic about time allowed. Contracts Homework contracts may take many forms. Focus on one goal at a time. When I accomplish this, I can watch 30 extra minutes of TV. When I have marked off five squares, I will select a reward from my list. Furthermore, it is important to be specific regarding your expectations regarding homework completion. Indicate definite starting and stopping points as well as minimum requirements. Monitoring time on task A timer is a useful device for monitoring time on task. It makes the passage of time more concrete for your child. Identify a reasonable time for your child to complete an assignment or a given part and set the timer to ring after that time. It is useful for your child to be able to observe the passage of time, on either the timer or hourglass. This means five minutes with good focus. I will set the timer and if you focus and practice appropriately the whole time, you will be done. Remember, I will have to restart the timer if you fool around in the middle. If you finish your homework correctly by the time the bell goes off, then you will get X reward or sticker. To phase out his dependence on the stickers, require a larger number of stickers for a reward as he becomes more responsible. Spinner Young children respond well to games as motivational aids.
