Green lived for several years after that in Chicago, where he worked for Booklist Magazine, a book review journal. While there, he reviewed hundreds of books of all varieties; his reviewing specialties included literary fiction, books about Islam, and books about conjoined twins. Green lived in New York City for two years while his wife attended graduate school. The original project ran from January 1 to December 31, , with the premise that the brothers would cease all text-based "textual" communication for the year and instead converse by video blogs, made available to the public via YouTube where they are known as the "vlogbrothers" and on their Brotherhood 2. The vlogs have several recurring themes: The community established by John, Hank and the Nerdfighters is often referred to as "Nerdfighteria". The opposite of a Nerdfighter is known as a Decepticon. Named after the infamous enemies of the Autobots Transformers based on their shared characteristic of being a team of villains as opposed to a single villain with many subservient henchmen. The Foundation to Decrease WorldSuck was created with the intention to "decrease worldsuck" by donating money that is given to the foundation to worthy causes. The Evil Baby Orphanage was a proposal to use a time machine to kidnap historical despots in infancy e. Hank used to post amusing songs every other Wednesday hence the day being called "Song Wednesday". The most famous of these, "Accio Deathly Hallows", was the first Brotherhood 2. Viewers who post unkind things on the YouTube comments have been given the name "Giant Squids of Anger" and are not considered Nerdfighterly. It grew to be the name of a forum on the Nerdfighters website and an online picture book "Everyone Poops In My Pants". Perhaps most noticeably to non-Nerdfighters, John and Hank created an annual YouTube charity project called The Project for Awesome P4A for short , a project in which YouTube users take one day December 17th out of their year to create a video promoting a charity of their choosing. The 3rd P4A, in , dominated the YouTube popularity charts, ending the event with not a single non-P4A video appearing on approximately the first half a dozen pages of the lists for Most Viewed, Most Commented, and Most Favorited. In addition, at one point the hashtag P4A reached the number one trending topic on Twitter, and remained on the list without fail throughout the entire event. Vlogbrothers after Brotherhood 2. Following the conclusion of Brotherhood 2. The website was originally maintained solely by Hank Green, but is now updated and moderated by a group of Nerdfighter volunteers called the "Ningmasters". New projects, videos and discussions, as well as groups and forums entirely made by the Nerdfighters themselves, are uploaded every day. The duo also created a sub-project of Vlogbrothers called Truth or Fail official site , a game show that is most frequently hosted by Hank but also sometimes by guest hosts. The channel can also be found on YouTube. Green "introduced" his son Henry Green upon his return to vlogging on 15 February The film rights to Looking for Alaska were purchased by Paramount in and the movie scheduled to be released in Green collaborated on a book with fellow young adult authors Maureen Johnson and Lauren Myracle called Let It Snow , which contains three interconnected short stories that take place in the same small town on Christmas Eve during a massive snowstorm. The story that he penned is called "A Cheertastic Christmas Miracle". Green was hired to write the Paper Towns screenplay. Green has collaborated with fellow young adult writer and friend David Levithan on a book entitled Will Grayson, Will Grayson, which was released April 6, In August , Green confirmed he was writing a new book, titled The Sequel, with an expected release in On a BlogTV show, he announced that he had scrapped The Sequel, before reading an excerpt from his new novel, tentatively titled Everything is Surrounded by Water.
