More easy guitar songs And now I also want to say a word about timing. These provide you with two important pieces of information about the song that you are going to play. The top number tells you how many beats are in a measure and we learned about measures in Before You Accuse Me. It looks like the symbol for a penny and, of course, my keyboard does not have one! Probably eighty-five to ninety percent of all songs are written in either of these two time signatures. For right now, all you have to worry about is getting the right count. For now, simply notice that each measure is six eighth notes strung together "so your count will be very smooth and totally without incident. There is nothing at all here to trip you up in any way. The easiest way to start learning to fingerpick is simply to get your fingers going using the simplest pattern possible. To start with, begin with your bass note and play three strings in a downstroke with your thumb yes, even though I told you to just use your thumb on the lowest three strings! Hang in there with me on this! If you can, try to use the following fingers: Getting used to using all of your fingers is usually the hardest part of fingerpicking. Many people seem to have a natural tendency towards just using one or two. But if you get yourself into the habit of employing all of your fingers early on, you have a great chance to find that playing finger style guitar is nowhere near as hard as you thought it might be. Play each chord until you feel comfortable with it. This will take time for some of you, yes, but the time you spend on it now will pay all sorts of dividends down the road. How is it going? Take your time and just get used to using your fingers and thumbs in a coordinated manner. You will be surprised at how quickly it comes to you.
