

Chapter 1 : Dear Church, Hereâ€™s Why People Are Really Leaving You

Officials balked because they didn't want to trigger a constitutional crisis, this person said. No one publicly stepped forward to take credit for the editorial. Haley wrote a Washington Post op-ed calling out the anonymous author.

I love the picture: I moderate a class taught at my organization on effective communication, basically we help people communicate quickly and effectively using the narrative. The students learn quickly how what they communicate is decoded then delivered back. This is a simple version of what we need to do everyday in business, send a message, the receiver decodes then delivers it on to the next step of your organizational hierarchy. Student B was just spitting out what Student A communicated was important to the conversation. Student A can tell a quick story about himself or his family, stories are memorable and can contain appropriate detail they are also very repeatable. Command and General Staff College: The opinions expressed here are my own and not those of my classmates or the US Army. Talking is words, communication is perceptions. This is crucial in public relations, particularly international relations. I relate this saying to a time even before people become business executives or PR practitioners. This statement I believe starts in the classroom between teacher and student. A teacher â€™ student relationship can also be related to a business relationship where communication is key to success from both parties. Ingridchan Yes i agree, Everyone has their own background and context that they overlay on top of what they hear. But they are more than capably rising to meet that challenge and, consequently, the company shows no signs of stopping with their membership (due to expand) and their ethos is set to continue.

We are magical so magical Our weight in gold, And we would never grow old. I heard this Song between and but maybe it is oder. Sung by a man: Girl, want you sacrifice The Love that i give to you. On my knees i beg you to stay let me be your man. Breaks my heart in two Fall in love with you Please help me find this Song. I am looking to find out who sings this song from the 80s that the chorus goes like this: Those all the words I can remember from the song. I can hear it in my head and It is a male voice and progressive rock. The words could be crying, lying or trying in the chorus but pretty sure it is crying. I have tried googling it so many ways and times with no luck. I hope you have better luck than me. She bought herself worth at the fine-and-dine? Matt Jay 09 November Song goes. I should have used soundcloud for it but i didnt and i thought i kept hearing her say either "sunk into your eyes" or "song into your eyes" so i jotted those lyrics down And i now cant find that song anywhere I spent literally years searching for this song but to no avail. Like he can see everything else but her! Only lyrics I remember are sort of like: She misses him but its over and shes trying to move on blah blah. Its a soft and pretty song, obviously female singer. Thanks in advance for any help you might be able to give me.

Chapter 3 : Communication is about what they hear, not what you say

Those who shout about fairness to the accused should stop to consider what they don't know – including how difficult it is for victims to complain about a prominent person.

We are socially conditioned to think twice about being straight with people. Occasionally telling people what they want to hear and not over anything of particular significance is one thing, but when we habitually tell people what we think that they want to hear, we not only wind up being dishonest but we also wind people up. Telling people what they want to hear is akin to believing that people want to be bullshitted. If Mr and Miss Unavailables for instance, were more upfront, it would endanger their backup plan, shag, ego stroke, shoulder to lean on etc. Future Fakers talk up the future because they reason that it makes a person feel good now while conveniently forgetting that it also enables them to get what they want right now too. Passive aggressive people say one thing and do another, masking their resentment and anger with seeming compliance. When they tell people what they want to hear and then undermine it with conflicting actions, lo and behold, it causes a great deal of hurt, frustration, and yes, upset. They forget that the reactions are not about their belated honesty but about being jacked around. When we base who we are on what we think might be running through the minds of others or how we think they will react, we are anything but ourselves. Who we are is down to our values not the whims of others. We end up hurting and silencing ourselves. When we tell people what we think they want to hear, we set all parties involved up for disappointment plus we create unnecessary work. Is the fact that a person may not respond as we might like, a reasonable justification for ducking out of the responsibility we have to be us? Is it truly better to bullshit now and backtrack or speak up later? Words are not enough. The pleaser in me had many years of training but since I stopped, for instance, treating everyone like my parents incl. Most times that I tell people what they want to hear, it has blowback and I hate feeling like a child so I try to reduce the incidences and learn from it when I do. I used to be terrified of my mother and gradually biting the bullet has slayed that dragon in my mind and put some much needed boundaries in our relationship. Doing it occasionally is one thing, doing it habitually will only lead to ill feeling. Who am I protecting here – me or them?

Chapter 4 : That's What They Say | Michigan Radio

The condition or state in which humans exist in an absurd universe, without meaning or purpose. Used chiefly with the.

Now shut up and go share it on Facebook or something. Whose Fault it is Imagine this. Then suddenly you hear a crash. The two kids immediately point to each other and blame the other. They present their cases. They start whining and cutting each other off. What do you do? You either punish them both, or do nothing. None of this changes the fact that both of them were running around and being reckless around nice, precious objects. None of this changes the fact that theoretically, both were behaving negligently enough to cause destruction. You order a cod at a nice restaurant that is undercooked and sucks. You want to blame the chef so you call the manager over and go on a tirade. Or maybe they tried buying from a shitty supplier. But no, the chef sucks, fuck him. As humans, we all enjoy a scapegoat; we need a scapegoat. You see this most often with government. An entire bureaucratic system may be fucked up, causing continuous waste and inefficiency. A few people get blamed and fired and the system continues. The public is satisfied. Someone is blamed and punished, so everything must be right again? Like when engaging in chemical warfare. Or finding out who pissed on the toilet seat. Accept it and move on. Celebrity and Sports Gossip These people directly affect your life in absolutely no way whatsoever. Yeah, there, I said it. Sexual Jealousy A lot of people get jealous and possessive in relationships. Some people get even crazier. They get jealous of things that happened before they met their partner. They get jealous of things that might happen in the future. Sexual jealousy is a waste of energy and toxic for your relationship. If you trust your partner, then shut your mouth. Dishonest people cannot hide their dishonesty forever. Eventually, it will surface and be obvious. And on that day, dump them. Everything you do they accuse you of lying to them or sneaking around behind their back. This one is really simple. How do you learn and improve and become a better person? So try to be wrong about stuff a little more often. I like to punch those people. National Politics Pop quiz: Our lives are more directly affected by the results of local politics, yet nobody cares except old people, religious nuts , and conspiracy theorists. Instead, we all want to focus on the big stage. But the president is an easily consumable personality. National politics matter, but they are given a disproportionate amount of attention and importance. National politics drive profits for the national media markets, therefore they get the airplay. Since they get the airplay, everyone loses their shit over them. Take a moment and think back to the three most embarrassing moments in recent memory. Let me guess, at least two of them happened while trying to impress someone. Funny how that works. Trying to impress other people is a natural human trait. We all want to put our best foot forward. Being Offended There are some people in this world who seem to believe that they have the right to never be offended, ever. This drives me crazy. Part of freedom of expression is that some people, sometimes, are going to annoy you or offend you. Being offended is a choice. I get comments on this blog all the time that I find offensive. I almost never delete them. Recently, I had a guy who made a sexist comment about women the comment was to an article about dating, what a coincidence. Instead of getting up in arms about it, I simply informed him that I thought he was an idiot. I probably offended him back. The Fact that I skipped Number 7 on this list Get over it. And then you might get offended! Sure, buying luxury items can be cool and enjoyable. But basing your identity and self-worth on the quality of your possessions and how those possessions stack up to others is a losing battle. Even if you win and have the biggest toys, you lose. The iPhone 5 will be there tomorrow. But it really is amazing how our culture encourages more and more to live up to some impossible ideal , some empty vessel of perfection. Where does real success come from? Because when you appreciate your faults, they lose their power over you. Instead of your weakness, they become your strength. In fact, most of us are somewhat deluded about ourselves. I put together a page ebook explaining how we can come to know ourselves better, just fill out your email in the form. of believers at some point. My prayers are with you. Virginia Moher This was a great article. The Church continues to live in the past and pretends that women are not holding down full time jobs outside the home. Would love to hear things from your perspective Virginia! Shogren, I beg to differ. We do have a place in the body of Christ. GaryS I have to conclude that you completely misunderstood me, Mildreanne, or else I did not express myself clearly. Of course women have a place in the Body of Christ. Half of the people I train for Christian ministry are women. Nor would I sit still if someone said there there is a monolithic manly point of view. We are all individuals, that is to say. Clarke Robertson Virginia, I do find that there are churches that are less hostile toward women who work outside the home and recognize their needs, though they may be hard to find. The problem I have is that even most of these churches see women having divinely decreed roles that are subordinate to men, both in the church and in relationships. A growing number of Christians, including myself, see this as an error, with the verses commonly cited at restricting women from certain roles in the church and the home taken out of context. I for one like to consider my partner an equal partner. This is one thing I do see driving some people away from the Church. I have needs and those needs were not being met by the Church. I was supposed to give and give and get nothing in return but shame and guilt. Steve Just curious, but are you just done with Church, or with the faith as well? Not all of them can be stay-at-home moms. It isnt fair, and it certainly isnt what i think of as love becoming of a group of believers who claim to emulate the God of love Granted, too, there are many exceptions out there, but they shouldnt be exceptions Loreen Steve and Rueban, obviously not Virginia, my spouse was cheating regularly, church said I had to forgive, he moved in with his lady friend, I had to forgive. Work in the church? Taught 2 classes, did the funeral lunches, worked the food pantry, the homeless week, food drives, sat on committees. A young man was beating his child and abusing his wife, she was told to forgive even as her spouse was sent to jail. Where is the compassion for the woman? Burke To forgive is a conscious decision to not hold something against someone weather they ask for forgiveness or not. Forgiveness does not mean you must continue in an abusive relationship. If we walk with an unforgiving heart we are not walking in the fruit of the Spirit and we allow the devil access. Also the body of the church people with Jesus as the head should be showing compassion for any of their brothers and sisters that are abused and for that manner helping anyone that needs help. Scripture in Hebrews specifically tells us to be kind to strangers. Scripture in Corinthians specifically tells us to help widows and orphans. In all things we must act out of love. We must always forgive for our own sake. But that does NOT mean we have to maintain relationship with unrepentant or dangerous people. Any Church or Pastor that would recommend staying in those relationships you described does NOT understand the love of God. GrimmEngineer A man or woman should not put away his spouse except for the cause of fornication. This is a direct teaching of Jesus Christ that is in the new testament. Jesus understands the breaking of the solemn bond of matrimony and what mental damage this does to the relationship, which is why this is the only exception made. Blessed be the woman who can forgive a spouse of this.
