Chapter 1 : How to Write a Book Report (with Sample Reports) - wikiHow

In the body of your book report, you will use your notes to guide you through an extended summary of the book. You will weave your own thoughts and impressions into the plot summary. As you review the text, you'll want to focus on key moments in the story line and relate them to the perceived theme of the book, and how the characters and.

Sadly, a lot of our credibility slips through the cracks because of our own inability to present a valid argument, independently of it being true or not after all, who owns The Truth? As stated in Chapter 1, under the title of "The rewards of writing reviews", "You will learn to analyze your tastes, your likes, and dislikes, and back up your statements of opinion with sound reasoning" Page 4. I liked very much the idea of presenting the "History of the Essay", as a reference on how it all began, since right up to the sixteenth century, as the author points out, everything that was considered culturally acceptable was always written in verse. It was since then, that qualified reviewers had been relied upon for almost everything mankind has been interested in trying. Sova devotes a whole chapter to the qualifications of the reviewer, be he an expert scholar or a starting student looking for good grades. Organization is the key not only of effective review-writing but also of everything that makes a good impression. The book divides the actual task of writing the report into three phases: There are a lot of good points made in these reviews and well worth reading. First of all, it is the one and only book that I have seen, devoted exclusively to writing reviews; and covers in a formal way just about everything that should be covered, and why. It is much like a teaching aid or text, and therefore is directed towards a formal review. So, if you are the type who wants for formality, this book will provide it for you. Personally, even though I am an Engineer, and understand the reason for order, I prefer much more personal freedom in my reading and reviewing, and also in the reviews of others. We all went through the formality of schooling. We all had to read "assigned reading" and write book reports and reviews. I, for one, never obtained my love for reading, and particularly that of writing reviews from my schooling exposure. As a matter of fact, by the time I finished university, I didn't even want to read anymore. A few years later, I picked up "Cannery Row" by Steinbeck, Steinbeck was never ever mentioned in my school or university and I enjoyed it so much, I proceeded to search for his other novels and one by one read them all. And so started my love for reading. Over the years my reading continued to increase, and even so much that I began to write reviews here on Amazon, and love every bit of it. I have come to the conclusion that the education system is sadly lacking in two areas. First, we are not taught to read properly and no mention is made of Speed Reading or Memory Training. These are both great skills to have.

How to Write Book Reports by Harry Teitelbaum is a reference device, written with the high school or college student in mind, but can be a handy tool for the discerning reviewer. The author actually explains the difference between a book report and a book review, and shares the rewards of writing reviews.

Use these twenty-five ideas to shake up your book-related activities. Most of the activities are adaptable across grade levels and are flexible enough for whole-group, small group, or individual assignments. Write a different ending for the book. Pretend you are a talk show host and interview the main character. Create a travel brochure for the setting of the story or scrapbook pages about key characters. Create a book jacket, including illustrations, an enticing synopsis, author bio, and favorable reviews. Summarize the book into a comic or story aimed for younger students or your classmates. Write a news article about an important event from the book. Write about the decisions you would make if you were the main character in the book. Dramatize a scene from the story with other students or using puppets. Choose two characters from the story and write a conversation they might have. Write a letter or email to a close friend recommending the book you have just read. Make a list of new, unusual, or interesting words or phrases found in your book. Prepare a television commercial about your book. Act out the commercial for your classmates. Write ten chat room-style questions that could be used to start an online discussion about the book. Make sure you provide a list of answers. Explain why you think this book will or will not be read years from now. Support your opinion by stating specific events in the story. Discuss one particular episode in the story that you remember most. Describe why you think it remains so clear to you. Address it to the publisher and mail it. Or, see if the author has a website and email it. Write a ballad or song about the characters and events in your story. Set the words to the music of a popular song and sing it to the class. Give a dramatic reading of a scene in the book to your classmates. Describe in detail three characters from the story. Design a poster or new book cover depicting the climax of the story. Write an acrostic poem about the book using the letters in the title of the book or the name of a character or author. Draw a classroom mural depicting a major scene s from the book. After reading an informational book, make a scrapbook about the topics. These ideas were adapted from November!

Chapter 3 : How To Write Book Reports

Clear Concise and Packed with The Nuts and Bolts on Everything You Need to Know. In just few easy steps, you'll learn how to organize and write top-notch reports and reviews of all types of literary works-from novels to plays.

It is not meant to write the report for you. It gives you a format or template for writing your own report. The original draft was developed by a teacher friend of mine to use with her own students. I have made a few additional enhancements which I believe make the model more clear and complete. A note of caution here. So, make sure they approve of this format before using it. The following book report format template is appropriate for students at the pre-college level who are required to write a report about a book they have read. For the type of book summaries applicable to college and university level undergraduate and post-graduate, as well as for business and professional situations, you can check out the following book summary service.

Introductory Paragraph The first sentence should state for which instructor and class the book-report is being written. The third sentence should tell how many pages the book has and the name of the publisher. The fourth sentence can state basic bibliographic information about the book. Bibliographic information means not only the author and title but also what company published the book, what year it was published in and any other relevant information such as the edition and if the book has been translated, simplified or abridged. The next sentence should state the reasons you decided to read this book. Why did you choose this particular book? Typical reasons might be: You like the author. You like this type of book. Someone recommended the book to you. It was on a required reading list. You liked the cover. These reasons do not have to be complex. Most people choose the books they read because they like the author or somebody recommended it to them. If you chose the book because you like the author, then state why you like that author. An optional sentence can be used if the cover back cover of the book gives you any additional information then add a sentence with that information. Was the book a best seller? Are there X million copies in print? Did it win any major awards?

Main Character's Paragraph The first sentence of this paragraph should state who the main character or characters of the book are, and why they are important. Refer to this person or these persons as the Main Character or Main Characters. You will need at least a complex sentence for this, and probably more than one sentence.

Other Characters Paragraph You should compose at least one sentence for each of the other prominent or important characters in the book. State the name of each of the other important characters, and the key role that each one plays in the book. Most books have five or six prominent characters besides the main character, so simply listing each one and stating their role in the book will give you a good sized paragraph.

Plot Summary Paragraph This is perhaps the hardest paragraph to write in five sentences or so. Here are the main points to cover: State the type of book Mystery, Western, etc. What place or country was the book set in? What time period was the book set in? Other physical locations which are important, like: Other notable attributes of the book. Was it violent, scary, fast paced, etc. What is the main character trying to do? What is the outcome of the book? Make sure you cover all of the major parts of the plot. You might have to go back through the book, chapter by chapter, and make a few notes.

Personal Impressions and Conclusion Paragraph Simply talk about what you liked or did not like about the book. Use this paragraph as your conclusion. It should summarize your overall impressions of the book and bring the report to a close. Start with a sentence that states that you are now writing a conclusion. Write two sentences that talk about the book's good points and weak points. Write a sentence or two about what you learned from the book. Close with a sentence that states whether you would recommend the book to others. Typically, your book report should not exceed two double-spaced pages, and it should be somewhere between 500 and 750 words in length.

Chapter 4 : Classroom Activities: 25 Book Report Alternatives | Scholastic

Writing an effective book report can be a challenging assignment for many students because it requires that you should analyze a large amount of information in comparatively small space, discuss the writer's main themes, the plot of the story, and characters from an objective stance.

Graphic Organizers can help students think about and list the major topics that will be covered in a fiction book report. First, read the book. The Structure of Your Report: Then write at least four to five paragraphs that clearly describe the book. Each paragraph should cover one topic for example, you should have at least one paragraph that describes the main character. End the report with a closing paragraph that summarizes what you learned from the book and if you liked or disliked the book and why. Finally, cite your references see the section below on formats for your bibliography. Check that your grammar, spelling, and punctuation are correct. Make sure to use complete sentences and write neatly! Define any technical terms that you use. Proofread your report for errors before you hand it in -- do not hand in a rough draft. Topics to Include in Your Report: When you write your report, try to cover as many of the following topics as you can: Describe the setting or settings of the book. Note where the action takes place and when. Have you ever been to a place like that? Did you like it or not? Would you like to be in a place and time like that described in the book? Write about the main character, including what they are like, what they look like, what they like to do, and so on. Does the character change, learn, or grow in the story? If so, describe how and why this happens. Would you like to be friends with this character? List the other characters in the books and give some characteristics for each. Did any of the characters do things that you think are wrong, noble, risky, etc? What happened at the beginning of the story?: How does the story start? Usually this is where the characters are introduced to us and the problem is stated. What happened in the middle of the story?: This is usually where we find out a lot about the characters and the story becomes more exciting. What happened at the end of the story?: This is usually where the main problem in the book is resolved. What was the problem in the story and how was it solved?: What was the big problem in the story, how was it solved, who solved it. What did you learn from this story?: The best books leave the reader with a lot to think about and learn. What was the main idea or theme of the book? Do you like this story?: When you write your bibliography, list all of your references. Formats for each type of publication follows there are different formats for different media: Name of Publisher, year of publication. Author s if appropriate. Title of Site or web page. URL of site, date of publication the earliest copyright year listed. Author s are listed last name first, first name or initials as cited in the publication. Charlie MacDuff and the Test of Time. Another format for Internet sources is as follows: Last name, First name of author. Name of the publisher EnchantedLearning. Date the page was created at Enchanted Learning, this is the earliest date on the copyright notice located at the bottom of each page , Date of revision at Enchanted Learning, we do not keep track of page revisions. Some teachers also request that you include the date of access; this is the date or dates that you went to the web page or pages.

Here, your kid should describe the period of time and setting of the given story. If the book belongs to the genre of fantasy, the child should state it and describe this period as past, future or present as fantasy worlds normally combine several times. As for setting, it traditionally describes the physical features of a certain place, where the plot unveils. Here the kid needs to mention the country, city, state or town. Readers are eager to know whether its location is urban or rural. In fact, any book has its own main character. He or she is always in the center of any conflict or event. In the first paragraph of this section, the kid should provide a detailed description of the crucial character, including size, age, features of hair and face, smile, posture, walk and so on. The second paragraph needs to be devoted to the key character traits of the leading personality in the story. For every trait chosen, the kid should provide a couple of examples of this character trait from the book. One should explore the way the character changes and develops as a result of certain events. Here the child needs to describe the most significant problem faced by the major character in the book. For instance, this may be a conflict with nature or with other characters. Moreover, the main character may even conflict with himself and with supernatural forces. At least three specific examples should be provided to support the choice of conflict. The main event One should allocate up to four paragraphs to this section. The main event normally deals with the events in which the previously described conflict is resolved. If the character conflicts with himself, the major event should describe how the character changes in an attempt to solve his conflict. Some examples of this purpose readers may find informing, entertaining, explaining or persuading. One paragraph to describe this would be enough. In one paragraph, the kid should thoroughly describe the effects the book had on him or her. How did the author inform, entertain, explain or persuade his readers? The child is expected to explain why he or she would recommend this book to read. Sure, the opposite opinion also requires a detailed explanation. Final requirements A typical length of a book report is about pages. Before writing a book report, the teacher should approved a book, which is going to be described. Both rough as well as final copies of book reports should be written in class. It would be useful to utilize different colored tabs to mark information on the main character, setting, conflict, etc. This will help your kid to understand, enjoy and summarize the story. Using point-form notes one can work out a decent draft. However, one should realize that point-form notes have nothing common with a rough draft with sentences written on index cards. Your kid should utilize an erasable pen or pencil for his or her rough as well as final drafts. When typing a report on a personal computer, one should choose black Times New Roman or Arial. The font size may range from 12 to We can simplify your writing assignment.

How to Write a Book Report. Writing a book report can be a lot of fun. It gives you a chance to read a new book and then tell your teacher and friends what you thought about it.

Creating Format A solid format creates the framework for the book summary. It also helps you determine how much information you need to draw from the book to develop the summary. The summary is significantly shorter than the original work, but the exact length depends on assignment guidelines and the size of the original writing. For a book with chapters, Butte College recommends dividing the number of chapters by the number of pages required for the paper. If your instructor assigns a five-page summary for a book that is 15 chapters long, each page might cover about three chapters. Six to eight paragraphs should sufficiently cover a paragraph article, for example. Finding Main Ideas in Nonfiction The type of passage you summarize influences the type of main ideas included in the paper. A nonfiction passage typically states the main ideas in a thesis statement in the introductory paragraph. In a longer passage or book, each section or chapter typically presents a main idea for that section. Note these topic sentences as you read the text. You should be able to condense it to one sentence. Jot down important facts that support that main idea. Analyzing Main Ideas in Fiction The key points in a novel typically take more work to identify. Instead of coming neatly packaged in a topic sentence, works of fiction present main ideas in the form of plot twists, key actions and revelations about characters. Look for pieces of information that change the story line or reveal things that are key to your understanding of the story line. Synthesizing the Key Points The introduction of the summary should include the title and author of the text, along with the overall main idea or storyline of the entire work. You can also introduce the key points throughout the book. These additional key points become the topics of the paragraphs in the body of the summary. Develop the paragraphs with significant supporting details from the passage. This might include names of characters, dates and key events presented in chronological order. Include only details that actually happened in the book. Cite this Article A tool to create a citation to reference this article Cite this Article.
