This year, the full slate of wild-card games lacked any semblance of high drama, with each game decided by at least 13 points. Even the Green Bay versus New York tilt majorly disappointed. It is win or go home, and smart coaching will expose many good, but flawed rosters. These power rankings should set the table for a more competitive round of football. Relentless Mercilus lived in the backfield to come up with two sacks. A shell-shocked Cook went for, threw three picks, and took two sacks. The Raider offense went two-for-sixteen on third down and finished the game up with only total yards. The Houston offense was actually not much better. Lamar Miller was mostly ineffective, churning out a mere 2. Still, Houston managed to come away with a playoff win, in a boring, Choke Bowl game. From here, Houston will head out on the road to Foxborough and get blown out. Expect Bill Belichick to give Osweiler the Cook treatment. The Seahawks turned back the clock to Beast Mode and their glory years, feeding Thomas Rawls with 27 carries for yards and one touchdown. After establishing the run, Doug Baldwin was free to go to work for 11 receptions, yards, and a score in his own right. Now, Seattle players will pack their bags and travel more than 2, miles to Atlanta for a matchup nightmare. Falcon outside linebacker Victor Beasley led the league in sacks this year, with Next, expect Matt Ryan to air out the football over a demoralized Legion of Boom secondary missing Thomas. Seattle figures to be in for a long day in Atlanta. Next, Foxborough was the end of the road for these Chiefs, who were two touchdowns down for the majority of the Divisional Playoff Game. The Kansas City Chiefs are a good, but not great football team. On Christmas Day, Alex Smith completed the longest pass play of the season and his career, on a tight end screen to Travis Kelce. The Chiefs will be dead in the water, if they find themselves playing from behind at home against the high-octane Steelers. Top target Julio Jones racked up 83 receptions for 1, yards this season, despite missing two whole games of action. Expect the Falcons to come out with guns blazing against the Seahawks on the Georgia Dome fast track. Second-year player Beasley came into his own at linebacker and will overwhelm rookie offensive tackle George Fant. Fant actually played basketball at Western Kentucky and had never played organized football in his entire life until now. Expect the latest experiment out of rah-rah head coach Pete Carroll to crash and burn in Atlanta. Still, a confident Rodgers came out and signaled that Green Bay was set to run the table. Rodgers is now the hottest quarterback in the game, especially after lighting up the G-Men secondary for yards and four touchdowns. For the Divisional Round, Rodgers might just be the man to put in another flawless performance and steal a win in Dallas. The Steelers began the season as legitimate Super Bowl contenders and came out with a record. From there, the team dropped four straight games before finally righting the ship in Cleveland. Pittsburgh did close out the regular season with seven straights wins, including two tune-up games against the hapless, Browns. Next, Roethlisberger was out with a torn meniscus and missed a Week 7 start against the Patriots. Last week, Big Ben, Bell, and Brown played together in a playoff game for the first time in their careers. The Pittsburgh offense rolled the Dolphins for total yards, with Bell and Brown scoring two touchdowns each. The Dallas Cowboys rolled to a record behind their two hotshot rookies and road-grading offensive line. Still, there is no real substitute for experience. These young Cowboys do have a tough road ahead, with Rodgers, Roethlisberger, Brady, and their seven combined Super Bowl rings still alive and well in these playoffs. At the same time, the New England defense was the stingiest unit in football , limiting the opposition to a mere 16 points per game. Vegas already pegged New England as  For that game, Belichick put on another coaching clinic, throwing multiple looks at Osweiler, milking the clock with LeGarrette Blount, and getting the mobile Brissett out on the edge to make plays.

Watt is recovering from back surgery but is on track for another monster IDP season. Joey Bosa , LAC: Tackle totals are solid but not Watt-esque. Chandler Jones , ARI: Jones makes a a ton of tackles and belongs in the conversation for best all-around defensive player. Safer than Watt, not as much upside as Mack. Calais Campbell , JAC: Perhaps the most accomplished DL behind Watt, Campbell is on a dominant defense and stands out as a stat stuffer in all categories. Aaron Donald , LAR: Donald seems committed to reestablishing himself as an elite talent and is on a defense where he may be expected to do a little more this season. Melvin Ingram , LAC: Cameron Jordan , NO: Jordan has always ben excellent, but he really had a breakout season and added 11 PDs. He could see a dip in production but is worth a look in the Top  Demarcus Lawrence , DAL: A pass rusher with strength and speed to post sacks in any game. Everson Griffen , MIN: Griffen has been playing through plantar fasciitis but is still worth a Top 15 selection. He still posted monster numbers in Cameron Heyward , PIT: The "other" Cameron had a career high in sacks 12 and anchors the Pittsburgh D line. Carlos Dunlap , CIN: Ziggy Ansah , DET: Ansah is coming off a sack season and projects inside the Top 15 DL. Vic Beasley , ATL: Beasley at DE is a lot easier to stomach than at LB, where his production dipped considerably in  He should be back to his sacks this season. Jason Pierre-Paul , TB: JPP finds a new home in Tampa and will immediately add a huge pass-rushing and run-stopping presence by the bay. Khalil Mack , CHI: A bona fide superstar and one of the best players in the league. David Irving , DAL:

Follow Mike Woellert on Twitter: My initial IDP rankings for the season have been released. Hopefully, these rankings will help establish a baseline and foundation for early drafters. So, without further ado, the breakdown of my rankings and tiers within each position. After missing seven games in , I have Luke Kuechly returning to the top of the perch among linebackers in  He is the quarterback of the Panther defense and a tackle machine. Bobby Wagner and Kwon Alexander are the next two in this tier. Wagner established a career-high in tackles with on a  Alexander dominated opposing offenses to the tune of solo tackles and has taken the torch from Lavonte David as the tackle machine of the Bucs defense. Alexander also established an elite  Alec Ogletree and Navorro Bowman round out the first tier. Tier 2 This tier is represents about 14 other linebackers who can be drafted as your LB1. Orr retired in the offseason, so Mosley should have the majority of tackle opportunities to himself. Mosley still managed 92 tackles, but after averaging tackles in his first two seasons, he saw a major dip thanks in to Orr. Brown notched a career-high in tackles with , which led to an elite  Sean Lee has played in 29 of a possible 32 games over the last two seasons and has averaged tackles and a  Lawrence Timmons left for South Beach and Shazier has the opportunity to lead the defense in tackles. In 1, career snaps, Shazier has recorded a  Eric Kendricks is another LB I think will make a leap in  Jerrell Freeman will be looking for his fifth campaign of plus tackles in his last six seasons. Instead, it was rookie Jatavis Brown who stole the show. Brown established himself as an every-down LB in Week 4 last season, but did miss some games due to injury. He did manage to produce a  The writing is on the wall for Paul Posluszny, who has moved to the strong side and could come off the field in nickel packages. Tier 3 B. The Giants brass is really high on the kid heading into his sophomore campaign. Apparently, he should be good to for and is going to be a strong tackler opposite Navorro Bowman. Along with Davis, he should be one of the first rookie off the board in re-draft leagues. Vince Williams took advantage of his snaps last season and produced a 4: Even a dip to percent, still projects him to record tackles. Nigel Bradham is also someone who gets overlooked. He turned in a solid campaign with Philly, producing 98 tackles and two sacks. I like me some old-man value in this tier with Derrick Johnson. Kamalei Correa should be on your target list. Thomas Davis is the bionic man. Since , Davis has appeared in 78 of 80 games, while producing an  Anthony had promise, but after appearing in snaps as a rookie, he received just in  Cory James intrigues me here. He started five games and produced a  He should line up opposite Jelani Jenkins in their base. Jenkins is another name to consider. Korey Toomer should be on your target list from this tier with Denzel Perryman missing signinficant time. He has a chance to be a three-down player alongside Jatavis Brown. Something was off as he produced just a percent pressure rate in the first three weeks of last season. If he converts a few more pressure into sacks, he could flirt with 15 this season. He also produces a solid amount of tackles, averaging 57 over last three seasons. Michael Bennett is the picture of consistency, but with his five missed games, he produced his lowest amount of sacks since  I might be higher than most on DeForest Buckner. His sacks came in bunches, but still hard not to like his upside and a 7. Calais Campbell finds himself on the southeast part of the country. In Jacksonville, he has a simple role: Expect eight sacks and 60 tackles. In , he produced nearly a percent QB pressure rate. If he can replicate the pressure rate, eight sacks is within reach. He has double-digit sack upside and is in the conversation as a top-5 DL. I also like Noah Spence within this tier. He produced a  I really like Frank Clark out of this tier. Clark generated nearly a percent pressure rate, resulting in 10 sacks in  Post bye-week, Ogbah had a strong finish, recording 2. Robert Ayers was a disrupter, generating a percent pressure rate. If you look at weeks , he was a stud. He managed a percent QB pressure rate and also notched 45 tackles. I think the Cowboys liked what they saw out of him during the last five games of the season, where he produced four sacks and 15 tackles, including five for a loss. Tier 4 How the mighty have fallen. I had Aaron Donald as a Tier 2 DL in , but his move from interior in a base to an end in an new has me off of him as a top DL. Rankins enters his second season with a lot of promise after an injury-marred rookie campaign. Only one more place to go for him. As of this writing. I think he has a Landon Collins-type impact this season. Tier 2 Jabrill Peppers is the second rookie to make the top I love the opportunity Peppers has in front of him. Jonathan Cyprien makes a move to a Titans team that has average linebacker play. He cut down on his missed tackles and finished with 97 solo tackles last season. Since , he has produced a Karl Joseph started in nine games as a rookie for the Raiders and produced a Antonie Bethea represents old-man value in this tier. I really like Eric Reid as a break-out candidate this season. In eight games, he produced a 6: He plays well against the run and in coverage, so he should be on the field for every snap. In snaps in , still managed to produce an Sean Davis is another break-out candidate at strong safety for the Steelers. Darius Butler has moved to strong safety for the Colts and should be on the field for every snap.

Watt is recovering from back surgery but is on track for another monster IDP season. Joey Bosa , LAC: Bosa will get to play a full season, with a full camp in a new defensive scheme that new DC Gus Bradley thinks will benefit the former Ohio State star. Cameron Jordan , NO: Jordan played through injuries last season and still tallied 58 total tackles and 7. Olivier Vernon , NYG: Vernon has a higher ceiling than JPP but a slightly lower floor. Muhammad Wilkerson , NYJ: Wilkerson should rebound from a lackluster season where he played hurt most of the year. Sheldon Richardson is probably out the door, so Wilkerson and Leonard Williams will highlight the Jets new line and post excellent numbers. Calais Campbell , JAC: Carlos Dunlap , CIN: A brilliant edge rusher with solid tackling skills, Dunlap remains an elite IDP option with plenty of upside. Kawann Short , CAR: Fletcher Cox , PHI: Cox returns to Philly for another campaign and should remain a dominant stat stuffer this year, even if his numbers were down a bit in  Everson Griffen , MIN: Ndamukong Suh , MIA: Suh is a tough veteran lineman coming off a career-high 72 total tackles. Cameron Wake , MIA: Myles Garrett , CLE: Buckner is still a solid bet for Top 20 DL numbers in , but the presence of Solomon Thomas could take away some tackles and sacks, and the coaches plan on giving him more snaps off this season as he faded down the stretch in his rookie campaign. Leonard Williams , NYJ: Williams is a force at NT and should post solid tackle numbers and sacks in his third season. Solomon Thomas , SF: Aaron Donald , LAR:

COMMENTS: J.J. Watt, HOU: Watt is recovering from back surgery but is on track for another monster IDP calendrierdelascience.com may be a little more risky than in previous seasons, but he's still the best overall option.

In fantasy football , playing in a "standard" league is like a guy buying khakis from the Gap. PPR stands for "points per reception. Newcomers to this format might assume wide receivers become vastly superior to running backs but more seasoned players know the trick is actually finding pass-catching running backs. For example, in standard, Leonard Fournette and Marshawn Lynch will typically go in the top picks. But in PPR, the smart move is to take these guys a full round or more later. In a recent industry PPR mock draft we did , L4 came off the board at 32 while Beast came off at 52 overall. A projection of around 30 receptions sounds about right for both. Meanwhile in the same mock, Joe Mixon 22 and Ty Montgomery 30 went much earlier than you would see in standard leagues because both could see 50ish receptions this year. That 20 reception differential is equivalent to yards in full-point PPR leagues. Not only is that a significant boost from a season-long perspective, the receptions also provide a much safer weekly floor, insulating you from low yardage and poor game scripts. At the top of the draft, Dez Bryant is a guy that takes a bit of a hit. The same goes for guys like Brandin Cooks and Donte Moncrief. Both see their high touchdown upside countered by relatively low usage rates. From the running back position, Latavius Murray becomes almost undraftable. On the flip side, once you get into the later rounds, guys like Darren Sproles , Chris Thompson , Theo Riddick and Danny Woodhead should start looking awfully attractive due to their exceptional receiving skills. Woodhead, in particular, is one of my favorite sleepers in PPR. Not bitter at all. But because managers will heavily skew towards younger players, it creates utter chaos come draft time as managers will be constantly balancing between winning now versus winning in the future. LeSean McCoy is a perfect example of a guy that keeper-league managers will be torn on. But at 29 years old and given that his effectiveness is predicated on quickness, keeper-league gurus will shy away with the idea that his game could age poorly. That being said, how long do you let him fall knowing he could legitimately win you a fake-game title this year? After pick 20, that decision-making process will be agonizingly tough. And the crazy fun part is that this will happen with a number of vets all throughout your draft. Overall, the strategy here is to take younger prospects much, much higher than you normally would in redraft leagues. Replacement-level quarterback play can be found easily and most managers will throw their QBs back into the pool anyway. What was said about McCoy above goes double for DeMarco Murray who is also 29 years old but has a monster waiting in the wings in Derrick Henry. I would not be shocked at all to see Henry go ahead of Murray in some drafts of this format, which would be insane in redraft leagues. The Tennessee example is the most extreme but generally speaking, young running back handcuffs will see a massive boost in value. Drafts of this nature usually take much, much, MUCH longer. A team auction draft is going to take you at least three hours at a minimum but four hours is not out of the question at all. Despite the heavy time commitment on draft day, in my mind, auctions are BY FAR the most intense and the most fun way to draft. The whole process starts with a manager nominating a player to bid on. Well when you are up for your first turn, nominate Aaron Rodgers for bidding. Martellus Bennett is a great example of a guy that is a high-profile sleeper that some love and others will shy away from. If you are in the latter camp like my guy Matt Franciscovich read why here then nominate Bennett early. I personally detest this format. You can read about it here. Depending on how many teams there are, quarterbacks will move up dramatically in drafts. In team, two-QB leagues, a case could absolutely be made for Aaron Rodgers to be taken first overall. That being said, in most two-QB setups, waiting on quarterbacks is still a good strategy. Addressing the position in the eighth or ninth round and taking two signal callers back-to-back is not a bad way to go. As a rule of thumb, I would draft pretty much as I would in a normal one-quarterback league, except I would give all quarterbacks a three-round bonus. So for example, if you would normally take a Tyrod Taylor in the 11th round, grab him in the eighth. At that point be sure to take one or two of your favorite quarterbacks that remain. Super Deep Leagues Overview: All you have to do is add an extra receiver spot, an extra flex spot, and three more bench spots. In mega deep leagues, depth is huge because talent on the waiver wire can be extremely thin. As opposed to shallow leagues, injuries in deeper leagues hurt more and you want to insulate yourself as much as possible. Regarding quarterbacks, as it was with two-QB leagues, I would still continue to wait on the position. The differential between the QB6 and the QB16 is a lot less than you would think. Beyond your traditional running back handcuffs, players who are afterthoughts in shallow leagues, guys like Zay Jones and Dwayne Allen , have a place in super deep leagues as injury insurance to Sammy Watkins and Rob Gronkowski. If you want to see how we drafted in a team PPR league click here. FAAB stands for free agent acquisition budget. Basically, once the season starts and waivers open up, instead of having your usual rotating waiver priority, you bid on players. Jonathan Williams , all of a sudden, becomes a huge fantasy asset. If he is on the waiver wire, every team will put in their bid and the highest bidder would acquire his services. Blowing your entire budget on one player is generally a bad idea. An acronym for Individual Defensive Player, in addition to offensive players, you select defensive players to accumulate points for things like tackles, sacks, and interceptions. You know, the great thing about being a writer for the interwebzzzz is that you can drop 2, words into a column for the sole purpose of culminating in a terrible "IDP leagues are trash" joke to rickroll people.
