Degas began painting and studying drawing at a young age, but also studied law for a short time. Held April 15 to May 15, 1875, in Paris, this was considered the first of eight exhibitions of the Impressionists. Like the Impressionists, he sought to capture fleeting moments in the flow of modern life, yet he showed little interest in painting plein air landscapes [outdoor landscapes], favoring scenes in theaters and cafes illuminated by artificial light, which he used to clarify the contours of his figures, adhering to his Academic training. Gerhard Gruitrooy in the coffee-table book Degas Impressions of a Great Master described this pastel on monotype painting: The earliest of these was a semipostal issued June 11, 1875, part of a Red Cross set honoring famous men. The bicolored slate black and gray semipostal was designed by Charles Mazelin and engraved by Claude Hertenberger. A young Degas, probably from his self-portrait, is shown on the left side of the stamp. The other two are immediately recognizable: Ballerina with a Bouquet of Flowers, the pastel and gouache painting of ballerina Rosita Mauri taking a curtain call; and the sculpture Little Dancer Aged Fourteen. This sculpture of Marie van Goethem, a young ballerina at the Paris Opera, was the only one that Degas exhibited during his lifetime. The National Gallery of Art, said: Art critic Elie de Mont was flabbergasted: The stamp shows the pastel known both as Dancers at Rest and simply Dancers, as is inscribed on the stamp. In June 1875, this design was used again along with the other nine designs from the booklet on a pane of stamps with attached labels that could be personalized for the pane, b for the Degas stamp. Three other French stamp booklets also feature Degas along with other artists. The first of these, issued in 1875, depicts 12 different portraits of women. The Degas stamp shows his Portrait of a Young Woman, painted in 1865. In conjunction with its stamp for the Year of the Snake in 1975, France issued a booklet of stamps showing the 12 animals of the Chinese zodiac as represented by different works of art. The last stamp in the booklet pictures a bronze sculpture of a horse by Degas. Degas displayed an interest in horses and horse racing early in his artistic career. His bronze of a horse marching with one leg raised, Cheval marchant au pas releve, is believed to date from around 1865. His heirs decided to have 72 of these cast in bronze, each in a limited edition of 20. Twenty of each, marked with the letters A through T, were for the public; one was for the heirs; and the other was for the foundry that cast the bronzes, A. France returned to the theme of portraits for a stamp booklet issued in April 1875 in conjunction with the Normandy Impressionist Festival held April 16 through Sept. The Degas stamp Scott shows his portrait of fellow painter Leon Bonnat. The two met when a young Degas was traveling and studying art in Italy. The postal administrations of France and Hong Kong participated in a joint issue in 1975 with the theme of heritage in art, featuring modern sculptures and older paintings by Chinese and French artists. In announcing its part of the joint issue, Hong Kong Post said: The differing planes on which the various protagonists are situated separate each of their roles in the picture. Each person is depicted from a different angle, and a large part of the canvas remains empty, almost as if it were a moment of real life. For membership and other information, visit the website. From this checklist, I discovered that in addition to France and Hong Kong more than 40 other postal administrations had issued Degas stamps. The former is an oil on canvas, and the latter is a pastel. One souvenir sheet contains four se-tenant side-by-side stamps featuring portraits, and the other has three se-tenant stamps showing paintings of dancers. More than half of his works depict dancers. The first was issued in Scott 1875, part of a set honoring various artists. The second one was issued Oct. 1875. The Maldives Islands has been one of the most prolific issuers of Degas stamps. From 1975 through 1995, it has released more than 20 Degas stamps: The stamps of 1975 have not yet been listed in the catalog. One of the stamps issued in Scott 1875 shows a self-portrait from the collection of the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York City. This likeness dates to about 1856, when the young artist quit his formal training at the Ecole des Beaux-Arts and set off for an extended sojourn in Italy. different, and the painting represents that subject. New stamps remembering Degas on the 100th anniversary of his death, such as the Jan. 1917 issue. This issue contains five stamps: This second sheet illustrates a variety of works by Degas, including a painting of the interior cotton office in New Orleans. His visit is something of a legend in New Orleans, told and retold with the casual disregard for historical accuracy that affects many New Orleans memories, but it is barely known elsewhere. Distracted and stalled in his profession on his arrival, he left the city with a new sense of direction and resolve. He also took with him, in his portfolio and his mind, several unforgettable images of New Orleans life. In the category of famous works of art on stamps, many of the Degas stamps specifically feature Impressionism, and others honor museums. A second souvenir sheet in that issue shows The Star. In 1917, Denmark issued stamps to mark the 100th anniversary of the Copenhagen art museum Ny Carlsberg Glyptote. The 8-krone denomination Scott 100 and part of the souvenir sheet shows the Degas sculpture Dancer: Looking at Her Right Foot. Looking at Her Right Foot is believed to have been sculpted around 1880. Later in life, Degas turned to sculpture as his eyesight, which had been bad for decades, grew progressively worse. The stamp from Italy Scott 100 promotes the fight against alcoholism and shows the painting that became known as The Absinthe Drinker. The design has a dance theme, showing tango dancers on the right and the ballerina from The Star on the left.

No, they actually had to make their own paint. See those small vials of powders? How Impressionists Made Paint See those pots of colors? Inside are ground up pigments made of all different kind of materials found in nature to make paint. Canvases too had to be made by each artist! Instead, they bought fabric, used wood to create a frame, nailed the canvas to a wooden frame and then prepared the canvas with a substance called gesso. Monet is not painting what he saw, instead combining light on the church at different times of the day over a period of months. We are going to make our own sidewalk chalk paint. Next, we will use one of their paintings as inspiration to create our own masterpiece. You can use this paint outside on the sidewalk if you are enjoying nice weather. We are in the dead of winter so we will paint on small postcard size pieces of paper. This paint is temporary. When it dries, it flakes off. If you want to save your image, be sure to take a photo of it when it is still wet. When it dries, the painting crumbles and flakes off.
