Describe your latest project. My latest project is actually two. Currently I am working on re-editing, extensively, a book I wrote quite a few years back. This book sold two years ago, however it was never released due to the fact that the publisher folded. I am also working on another historical erotic romance, this one with some paranormal elements. What ONE other author do you think readers should read? There are so many talented authors. If I had to pick a particular favorite of mine, though, it would be Diana Gabaldon. Her Outlander series not only draws the reader in to fall in love with the characters, but she leaps across the lines of taboo subjects we are told never to write about. And does it artfully. Please share a passage from a favorite author of yours, and what do you like about it? In the procession of the soul from within outward, it enlarges its circles ever, like the pebble thrown into the pond, or the light proceeding from an orb. His imagery and style of prose tend to sneak up on you with such surprise and layered meaning, that I pull one of his books off my shelf every so often and find a quiet corner for a while. Who would you love to invite to dinner living or not and why? Do I have to cook and clean the house before they come? And as I write historical stories, who better to get first hand evidence of what life was like when they lived. I find my mind wanders with the notes. I will on occasion listen to music before I sit down to write. To get into a particular mood to write a scene, I mostly listen to Celtic music. As far as which Celtic bands I listen to, they would be The Wicked Tinkers great battle music, lots of drums and The Chieftans amazingly haunting melodies. There are also several other CDs I use that have songs by various artists. Oh, and my husband plays the bagpipes, so personal concerts are always welcome. And I often get the opportunity to listen to the local pipe bands practice and play events. Have you had any interesting experiences with one of your readers – via blog, book signing, conference, correspondence? I love reading those kinds of stories. Input and opinions are great, rules are good to know, but listen first and foremost to your gut. Know that not everyone will read and fall in love with your story, or your voice, or your style. If your story truly touches your heart, it will touch others. Also, please provide a short bio or a link to one on your website if you have one. Writing, in one form or another, has been a way of life since high school, thanks to the encouragement of teachers and professors along the way.
