Love Unselfish, loyal, and benevolent concern for the well-being of another. The New Testament maintains this estimation of love throughout. Nevertheless, the reader who comes to the agape of the New Testament with the idea of benevolence in mind is better off than the reader who comes with the idea of physical pleasure and satisfaction. It describes physical love between the sexes, even sexual desire Judges It describes the love within a family and among friends Genesis Love as self-giving appears in the significant commandment that Israelites love the stranger. Hosea used the image of married love to teach us to understand both the faithlessness of Israel and the faithfulness of God. God desires steadfast love, but Israel had been unfaithful. His own relationship with an adulterous wife allowed Hosea the insight that God had not given up Israel in spite of her faithlessness. Just before the parable of the Good Samaritan, a lawyer quoted the two commands to love and then asked Jesus: Loving only those who love you is, according to Jesus, no better than those who are not His disciples. It is a way of living expected of those who are citizens of the Kingdom. The teachings of Jesus on love of enemy, it will be noted, are a part of the Sermon on the Mount which is directed to Christian disciples. See Sermon on the Mount. Love is patient and kind, not jealous or boastful, not arrogant or rude. Love is not selfish, irritable, or resentful. Love does not rejoice at wrong but in the right. Love bears, believes, hopes, and endures all things. All of these with love are important aspects of our lives here and now. Love in contrast to these, however, is not only for the here and now; it is forever. Prior to Paul, in fact, the Greek term agape was little used. Instead of using a word for love already filled with meaning, Paul took the seldom-used term and filled it with Christian meaning. This love of which Paul wrote is somewhat different from the love we normally experience and speak about. Christian love is not simply an emotion which arises because of the character of the one loved. It is not due to the loving quality of the lover. The source of Christian love is God Romans 5: Even though love does not begin in the human heart, the believer must actualize love. Love is also connected with hope. In the Writings of John The Johannine writings magnify the significance of love as forcefully and fully as any other writings. The key text in the first half of the Gospel of John is John 3: These themes are repeated throughout the Gospel of John. The second half of the Gospel of John emphasizes the ethical dimension of love among Christians. This command of Jesus to love one another gives us insight into the nature of Jesus Christ for the church and the nature of Christian love. What is commanded is not an emotion; it is the disciplined will to seek the welfare of others. Jesus speaks with the authority of the Father, the only One with authority to make such demands of men and women. Jesus speaks as the incarnate Word John 1: He has authority to give conditions for discipleship. The relationship of this commandment to Leviticus Our love for Jesus Christ is closely related to our fulfillment of the pastoral task. The Letters of John make explicit statements about the ethical implications of love. They claimed enlightenment and communion with God. John left no doubt about the relationship of love and belief in God. Love and Judgment The judgment account in Matthew The account depicts not only what happens at the end. The narrative makes plain that what happens at the end is what happens here and now. Christians love because they have been loved. Bibliography Information Butler, Trent C.
