

Chapter 1 : Canadian Investment Funds Course (CIFC) - IFIC Mutual Funds License Course

I recently wrote the exam for IFIC and thought to throw my two cents in here. Also keep in mind that CSI hands out many different exam booklets to students, so the questions I got may differ from the ones you will get. Math is given quite a bit of consideration. So knowing your formulas definitely helps. Plus those formulas can also help you with theory questions such as the Sharpe ratio. When do you get a negative value in the Sharpe ratio? If you know the formula, you can punch in dummy values and figure it out that way. Practice the exams, but also the chapter quizzes. Downside of practice exams is that they remain the same and you can eventually memorize the thing. Chapter quizzes on the other hand have several sets of questions that change things up, and keep you on your toes forcing you to rely on your knowledge. So practice it like there is no tomorrow. Quartile rankings, Comparison Universe, Benchmarks and etc. Their intention is to trick you with the wording. But if you have a solid understanding of the concepts and good comprehension skills, you should be fine. One question maybe super easy, but the one after that could bump the difficulty up to an eleven. So be prepared for that, stay sharp on your toes. Those are just a few things I can mention here. Mine was done on a bubble sheet, so I also highly recommend going back to check over your answers and darkening the answers once you are sure so the scanners can pick them up. You can always put it on there for your own reference to check later. If you do that, do spare yourself enough time to transfer over the answers from the question booklet to the bubble sheet. Other than that, good luck! Practice lots, eat good food, get to your exam location ahead of time and follow all the rules. If you have done your best in studying, then you can do your best in giving the exam. After all, your best is all that anyone can really ask for. For anyone looking to take the exam soon, I hope it works out for you! Formulas are definitely important but if you know all of your concepts and have great comprehension skills, you can do fine.
