Thornfield burning; the red room Here are eight important things to remember about Jane Eyre: As a result, she is easy for readers to sympathize with. The phrase "coming-of-age" literally means the character is maturing and coming closer to adulthood. Gothic novels focus on the mysterious; take place in dark, sometimes exotic, settings often houses that appear to be haunted ; but still entail an element of romance. The line "Reader, he married me. John Rivers and Mr. Rochester are foils â€ meaning opposites â€ of one another, especially in relation to Jane. John is cold and dispassionate, while Mr. Rochester is wildly indulgent and passionate. Even their physiques are a foil. Rochester is not handsome, but he does have extremely masculine features. On the other hand, St. John is classically beautiful. Jane Eyre is rebellious in a world demanding obedient women. In her own way, Jane rebels against Mrs. John Rivers, and even Mr. Rochester, the man she marries at the end of the book. But the rebel streak she has is targeted at "inequalities of society. One primary theme is class conflict. Although English society has a very strict hierarchy, moments throughout Jane Eyre reveal those lines being blurred. Gender conflict is a theme that threads throughout Jane Eyre. A major symbol in Jane Eyre is that of Thornfield burning. Prior to meeting Jane, Mr. Rochester is impulsive and wild. Rochester loses his hand and sight that he is able to change. Rochester can change, with the help of Jane, and be the perfect husband.

Jane Eyre fugge da Thornfield House, la residenza dove lavora come governante per il ricco Edward Rochester. L'isolamento e l'austerit  del luogo, oltre alla freddezza di Mr. Rochester, hanno infatti lasciato in segno sulla giovane Jane, nonostante la scorza dura che la vita in orfanotrofio le aveva fatto sviluppare.

Plot[edit] The film begins with Jane Eyre fleeing Thornfield Hall in the middle of the night and finding herself alone on the moors , in the pouring rain. She manages to reach the doorstep of Moor House, the home of Mr. John Rivers, a clergyman, and his two younger sisters, Mary and Diana. They take Jane in, saving her life. One day, Jane is locked in the Red Room, where her uncle died, and which Jane believes is haunted. She knocks herself unconscious on the door, after a huge cloud of ash comes down the chimney. Reed tells him that Jane is a deceitful child and is not to be trusted. Jane tells her aunt how much she hates her and that she is a hard-hearted woman. At Lowood, while another pupil, Helen Burns, is being beaten, Jane accidentally drops her slate. Brocklehurst brands her a liar and makes her stand on a chair all day. Jane and Helen become close friends, but Helen later dies of consumption tuberculosis. When she first arrives at Thornfield, a gloomy, isolated mansion, Jane mistakes Mrs. Fairfax for her employer, but she finds out that she is only the housekeeper for her absent master. While Jane is walking into town to post a letter, a horse passes her and throws its rider. Jane helps the gentleman to his horse. Later, back at the mansion, she learns that the horse rider is Mr. Edward Rochester, master of the house. He jokingly tells her that she must have bewitched his horse to make him fall. They gradually fall for one another. One night, Jane is awoken by a strange noise at her door, only to find that Mr. He thanks her for saving his life and holds her hand affectionately. The next day, Rochester leaves Thornfield to visit Lady Blanche Ingram, his future wife; he brings her back to Thornfield with him a few weeks later. That night, a scream awakens everyone. Rochester has the doctor take Mason away. Jane receives a letter from her old nurse, Bessie. Reed has been asking to see Jane. He wants to adopt Jane and make her a beneficiary in his will. Jane notices that the letter was dated three years ago. Reed tells Jane that she feels cursed by her. Jane forgives her aunt and returns to Thornfield, having begun a correspondence with John Eyre. Jane informs Rochester that she must leave Thornfield because of his impending marriage to Blanche Ingram. However, Rochester suddenly proclaims his love for Jane and proposes to her; they kiss passionately. During the wedding ceremony, Mr. Mason appears, along with a lawyer, declaring that Mr. Rochester cannot marry Jane because he is still married to Mr. Rochester admits this is true and takes Jane to meet his violently deranged wife, calling her his own demon; they find her locked away in a room at Thornfield. Rochester tells Jane that his father wanted him to marry Bertha for her money. Once they were married, he discovered that she was rapidly descending into madness and was forced to lock her away in Thornfield; she was the one responsible for the strange happenings in the house. Refusing to act against her principles, and despite her enduring love for Rochester, Jane leaves Thornfield in the middle of the night. After struggling for days in poverty and starvation, Jane is discovered by a man called St. John Rivers, who saves her life by offering her food and shelter. After Jane regains her health, St. John goes on to find her a teaching position at a nearby charity school. One night, she hears knocking at her door and imagines it to be Rochester, but it turns out to be St. Jane offers to share the money with St. John and his sisters, suggesting that they live together at Moor House; they agree to the offer. John asks Jane to marry him and go with him to India. Jane returns to Thornfield, only to find the house a blackened ruin. She learns from Mrs. Jane finds Rochester, who has lost his eyesight in the fire. Jane reunites with him and they embrace.

It is several years after her parents died of typhus. Reed and her three children are abusive to Jane. Excluded from the family activities, Jane leads a unhappy childhood, with only a doll and books with which to entertain herself. One day, as punishment for defending herself against her cousin John Reed, Jane is relegated to the red room in which her late uncle had died; there, she faints from panic after she thinks she has seen his ghost. She is subsequently attended to by the kindly apothecary Mr. Lloyd to whom Jane reveals how unhappy she is living at Gateshead Hall. He recommends to Mrs. Reed that Jane should be sent to school, an idea Mrs. Reed then enlists the aid of the harsh Mr. Brocklehurst, director of Lowood Institution, a charity school for girls. Brocklehurst that Jane has a "tendency for deceit", which he interprets as her being a "liar". Before Jane leaves, however, she confronts Mrs. Reed and her daughters, Georgiana and Eliza, are the ones who are deceitful, and that she will tell everyone at Lowood how cruelly Mrs. During a school inspection by Mr. Brocklehurst, Jane accidentally breaks her slate, thereby drawing attention to herself. He then stands her on a stool, brands her a liar, and shames her before the entire assembly. Jane is later comforted by Helen. Jane is then publicly cleared of Mr. The 80 pupils at Lowood are subjected to cold rooms, poor meals, and thin clothing. Conditions at the school then improve dramatically. Thornfield Hall After six years as a student and two as a teacher at Lowood, Jane decides to leave, like her friend and confidante Miss Temple, who recently married. She advertises her services as a governess and receives one reply, from Alice Fairfax, housekeeper at Thornfield Hall. One night, while Jane is walking to a nearby town, a horseman passes her. The horse slips on ice and throws the rider. Later, back at Thornfield, she learns that this man is Edward Rochester, master of the house. Rochester teases her, accusing her of bewitching his horse to make him fall. He also talks strangely in other ways, but Jane is able to stand up to his initially arrogant manner. Odd things start to happen at the house, such as a strange laugh, a mysterious fire in Mr. After Jane saved Mr. Rochester from the fire, he thanked her tenderly and emotionally, and that night Jane felt strange emotions of her own, towards him. Next day, however, he left unexpectedly for a distant party gathering, and several days later returned with the whole party, including the beautiful and talented Blanche Ingram. Jane sees that Blanche and Mr. Rochester favour each other, and starts to feel jealous, particularly because she also sees that Blanche is snobbish and heartless, and unworthy of "her" Mr. Jane then receives word that Mrs. Reed is calling for her, because she has suffered a stroke after John Reed has died. Jane returns to Gateshead and remains there for a month, attending to her dying aunt. John Eyre, in which he asks for her to live with him and be his heir. Reed admits to telling Mr. Eyre that Jane had died of fever at Lowood. Reed dies, and Jane helps her cousins after the funeral before returning to Thornfield. Townsend Back at Thornfield, Jane broods over Mr. However, one midsummer evening, Rochester baits Jane by saying how much he will miss her after getting married, but how she will soon forget him. The normally self-controlled Jane reveals her feelings for him. Rochester is then sure that Jane is sincerely in love with him, and he proposes marriage. Jane is at first sceptical of his sincerity, before accepting his proposal. She then writes to her Uncle John, telling him of her happy news. As with the previous mysterious events, Mr. Rochester attributes the incident to Grace Poole, one of his servants. During the wedding ceremony, Mr. Mason and a lawyer declare that Mr. Rochester cannot marry because he is already married to Mr. Rochester admits this is true but explains that his father tricked him into the marriage for her money. Once they were united, he discovered that she was rapidly descending into congenital madness, and so he eventually locked her away in Thornfield, hiring Grace Poole as a nurse to look after her. John Eyre, is a friend of Mr. After the marriage ceremony is broken off, Mr. Rochester asks Jane to go with him to the south of France, and live with him as husband and wife, even though they cannot be married. Refusing to go against her principles, and despite her love for him, Jane leaves Thornfield in the middle of the night. She accidentally leaves her bundle of possessions on the coach and is forced to sleep on the moor, and unsuccessfully attempts to trade her handkerchief and gloves for food. Exhausted and starving, she eventually makes her way to the home of Diana and Mary Rivers, but is turned away by the housekeeper. She collapses on the doorstep, preparing for her death. After she regains her health, St. John finds Jane a teaching position at a nearby village school. Jane becomes good friends with the sisters, but St. The sisters leave for governess jobs, and St. John becomes somewhat closer to Jane. When Jane questions him further, St. They had once hoped for a share of the inheritance but were left virtually nothing. Jane, overjoyed by finding that she has living and friendly family members, insists on sharing the money equally with her cousins, and Diana and Mary come back to live at Moor House. John asks her to marry him and to go with him to India, not out of love, but out of duty. Jane initially accepts going to India but rejects the marriage proposal, suggesting they travel as brother and sister. John begins to weaken, she mystically hears Mr. Jane then returns to Thornfield to find only blackened ruins. She learns that Mr. In his rescue attempts, Mr. Rochester lost a hand and his eyesight. Jane reunites with him, but he fears that she will be repulsed by his condition. When Jane assures him of her love and tells him that she will never leave him, Mr. Rochester proposes again, and they are married. He eventually recovers sight enough to see their newborn son. JANE EYRE is a television adaptation of Charlotte Brontë's novel of the same name. The story, which has been the subject of numerous television and film adaptations is based on the life of the eponymous orphan.

Although she meets with a series of individuals who threaten her autonomy, Jane repeatedly succeeds at asserting herself and maintains her principles of justice, human dignity, and morality. She also values intellectual and emotional fulfillment. Her strong belief in gender and social equality challenges the Victorian prejudices against women and the poor. Read an in-depth analysis of Jane Eyre. Rochester is unconventional, ready to set aside polite manners, propriety, and consideration of social class in order to interact with Jane frankly and directly. He is rash and impetuous and has spent much of his adult life roaming about Europe in an attempt to avoid the consequences of his youthful indiscretions. His problems are partly the result of his own recklessness, but he is a sympathetic figure because he has suffered for so long as a result of his early marriage to Bertha. Read an in-depth analysis of Edward Rochester. The minister at Morton, St. John is cold, reserved, and often controlling in his interactions with others. Because he is entirely alienated from his feelings and devoted solely to an austere ambition, St. John serves as a foil to Edward Rochester. Read an in-depth analysis of St. Later in her life, Jane attempts reconciliation with her aunt, but the old woman continues to resent her because her husband had always loved Jane more than his own children. Always kind to Jane, Mr. The beautiful Georgiana treats Jane cruelly when they are children, but later in their lives she befriends her cousin and confides in her. Reed of the arrangement and sabotages the plan. Reed dies, Georgiana marries a wealthy man. Not as beautiful as her sister, Eliza devotes herself somewhat self-righteously to the church and eventually goes to a convent in France where she becomes the Mother Superior. John treats Jane with appalling cruelty during their childhood and later falls into a life of drinking and gambling. John commits suicide midway through the novel when his mother ceases to pay his debts for him. She endures her miserable life there with a passive dignity that Jane cannot understand. Read an in-depth analysis of Helen Burns. Brocklehurst preaches a doctrine of privation, while stealing from the school to support his luxurious lifestyle. Miss Temple helps clear Jane of Mrs. She is the first to tell Jane that the mysterious laughter often heard echoing through the halls is, in fact, the laughter of Grace Poole—a lie that Rochester himself often repeats. She lives locked in a secret room on the third story of Thornfield and is guarded by Grace Poole, whose occasional bouts of inebriation sometimes enable Bertha to escape. Bertha eventually burns down Thornfield, plunging to her death in the flames. When Jane first arrives at Thornfield, Mrs. Rochester brought her to Thornfield after her mother, Celine, abandoned her. Rochester had broken off his relationship with Celine after learning that Celine was unfaithful to him and interested only in his money. During a visit to Thornfield, he is injured by his mad sister. Diana is a kind and intelligent person, and she urges Jane not to go to India with St. She serves as a model for Jane of an intellectually gifted and independent woman. Mary is a kind and intelligent young woman who is forced to work as a governess after her father loses his fortune. Like her sister, she serves as a model for Jane of an independent woman who is also able to maintain close relationships with others and a sense of meaning in her life. Rosamond gives money to the school in Morton where Jane works. Although she is in love with St. John, she becomes engaged to the wealthy Mr. In her childhood, Jane believes that she feels the presence of his ghost. Because he was always fond of Jane and her mother his sister , Uncle Reed made his wife promise that she would raise Jane as her own child. It is a promise that Mrs. Reed does not keep.
