Go Fly a Kite Meaning Definition: Go away; stop bothering me. Origin of Go Fly a Kite This expression is a frank, impolite way to tell someone to go away or leave you alone. It is not very common these days. However, it was popular in shows and other forms of entertainment from the s, when it originated, and for several decades after. The modern equivalent is go to hell, although this version is even more impolite. Go fly a kite likely comes from the literal meaning. If a person goes to fly a kite, this would mean he or she would need to walk away to do so. This is also true for the synonymous expression go jump in a lake. The important part of the expression is go, not what the person will do once he or she goes away. Another similar example is get lost. People use this idiom in the imperative form.
