Chapter 3 : A History of New York Summary - calendrierdelascience.com

INTRODUCTION. KNICKERBOCKER'S HISTORY OF NEW YORK is the book, published in December, , with which Washington Irving, at the age of twenty-six, first won wide credit and influence.

In , the lot became unavailable for use, and the group was forced to look for another location. In order to pay the rental fees, Cartwright organized a ball club so that he could collect the needed money. The club was named the "Knickerbockers", in honor of the fire company where Cartwright was a member. The Knickerbockers club was organized on September 23, The first officers were Duncan F. Curry , president, William R. Wheaton , vice-president, and William H. Creating a club for the ball players called for a formal set of rules for each member to adhere to, foremost among them to "have the reputation of a gentleman". Wheaton and Tucker formalized the Knickerbocker Rules , a set of twenty rules for the team: Members must strictly observe the time agreed upon for exercise, and be punctual in their attendance. When assembled for exercise, the President, or in his absence, the Vice-President, shall appoint an umpire , who shall keep the game in a book provided for that purpose, and note all violations of the By-Laws and Rules during the time of exercise. The presiding officer shall designate two members as Captains , who shall retire and make the match to be played, observing at the same time that the players opposite to each other should be as nearly equal as possible, the choice of sides to be then tossed for, and the first in hand to be decided in like manner. The bases shall be from "home" to second base, forty-two paces; from first to third base, forty-two paces, equidistant. No stump match shall be played on a regular day of exercise. If there should not be a sufficient number of members of the Club present at the time agreed upon to commence exercise, gentlemen not members may be chosen in to make up the match, which shall not be broken up to take in members that may afterwards appear; but in all cases, members shall have the preference, when present, at the making of a match. If members appear after the game is commenced, they may be chosen in if mutually agreed upon. The game to consist of twenty-one counts, or aces; but at the conclusion an equal number of hands must be played. The ball must be pitched, not thrown, for the bat. A ball knocked out of the field, or outside the range of first or third base, is foul. Three balls being struck at and missed and the last one caught, is a hand out ; if not caught is considered fair, and the striker bound to run. If a ball be struck, or tipped, and caught, either flying or on the first bound, it is a hand out. A player running the bases shall be out, if the ball is in the hands of an adversary on the base, or the runner is touched with it before he makes his base; it being understood, however, that in no instance is a ball to be thrown at him. A player running who shall prevent an adversary from catching or getting the ball before making his base, is a hand out. Three hands out, all out. Players must take their strike in regular turn. All disputes and differences relative to the game, to be decided by the Umpire, from which there is no appeal. No ace or base can be made on a foul strike. A runner cannot be put out in making one base, when a balk is made by the pitcher. But one base allowed when a ball bounds out of the field when struck. It is likely that Wheaton picked some of his twenty rules based upon his previous experience in town ball play in Manhattan. According to his own account some fifty years later, his written rules for the Gotham Base Ball Club in eliminated "plugging" the runner and laid out the infield as a regular diamond. The twenty rules differed in several respects from other early versions of baseball and from rounders , the English game commonly considered the closest relative of baseball. According to Wheaton, "The new game quickly became very popular with New Yorkers, and the numbers of the club soon swelled beyond the fastidious notions of some of us, and we decided to withdraw and found a new organization, which we called the Knickerbocker. Salt print of the " New York Knickerbockers, taken December What was long considered the first "officially recorded" baseball game was played on June 19, at the Elysian Fields in Hoboken, New Jersey. Cartwright was the umpire during this game and fined one player six cents for cursing. The lineups for the teams:
