Chapter 1 : Learn Spanish the Fast and Fun Way by Gene M. Hammitt

I found this after struggling to learn pronunciation from the Learn in Your Car Spanish tape series. After acquiring basic pronunciation, I would use this series before going onto the Mastering Spanish series, which provides much further practice in sentence construction.

Today we have a very special and different post. Yes, we are having a guest in the Spanish by Doing Blog! Interestingly to note so far, I have never heard a Spanish speaker utter these words before, only the Terminator. I am here to share my story on how I went about learning Spanish, because not long ago I was once in your shoes, trying to learn Spanish, perhaps with different reasons to yours. However, regardless of the reasons, the feelings of confusion and embarrassment were always there. Before I share my secrets of learning Spanish, here is something you need to know about me: I moved from New Zealand to Australia about 8 years ago. In , while living in Australia, I met my now-husband who happens to be from Chile! And you guessed it, that was my reason for learning Spanish right there. I moved to Santiago and lived there for over a year. I was overly confident and thought I could get around by speaking English every day, like, ordering food at a restaurant, or going shopping, and so on. Turns out, not everyone in Chile can speak English. And why would they? If you travel around South America, you only need to know Spanish or Portuguese in Brazil , no reason to learn English unless you have plans to travel to the United States. But even there, in some states, Spanish is often spoken. Trying to speak Spanish in Chile was extremely frustrating, I lacked confidence and I was extremely shy and self-conscious of speaking Spanish in public. They swallow most of the letters. I joke with my friends when I say I speak Spanish and Chilean. So, if you are anything like me, then you will find my below tips useful. Here is what got me started and helped me prepare for Spanish, build confidence and overcome my fears. What a great and enjoyable way to learn the language. Memorize the lyrics, then go and check the meaning in a dictionary so you know what you are singing about. Watch Spanish movies, including telenovelas Spanish soap operas Watching Spanish movies with subtitles, will help you learn the language faster, simply because you are able to associate actions with words. And if you feel like you are ready to face a challenge, cover the subtitles with something if you have a smart TV, remove the subtitle option and keep watching! My friends recommended I try watching telenovelas, as it is done in a really easy to understand script, meaning you will pick up Spanish in no time! Duolingo Duolingo is a free app that you can download on any smart device, like phones and tablets. You can use it to practice your pronunciation and also expand your vocabulary. It did help me a lot with vocabulary in the beginning. These classes were all in Spanish! It was a great way to learn the language and at the same time keep fit and have some fun! Mingle and Socialize Join Meetup www.meetup.com. Here is a chance to interact and practice your Spanish skills with native speakers, and build confidence at the same time. I regularly attend meetup groups in Santiago, great way to meet people as well if you are new in the country!

Even if I could read a sentence written out in Spanish and get the gist of it, if someone spoke that same sentence aloud to me, it would be a jumble of noise. While I wish I had a magic cure for this problem, the truth is that you need to train your ear to associate Spanish sounds with the written form, and this does take time. With just a few weeks of consistent practice, you can train your ear to adapt to the sounds of Spanish. But what do you do to help associate those sounds with actual words? In my case, in Spain, I found Spaniards speaking at normal speed almost impossible to understand. I was close to giving up when I found that making friends from Mexico and Ecuador even while in Spain made a world of difference, because Mexicans and Ecuadorians tend to speak Spanish more slowly. This helped me a lot, since the stories have very simple plots which keep me engaged, while at the same time I get to listen to genuine spoken Spanish. After a few months using this technique I was ready to talk to Spaniards, and now I understand them just as easily. If possible, try to get your favourite movie or TV series in Spanish. To do this, I generally search for the series on Wikipedia, then click on the left to view the equivalent article in Spanish. Alternatively, the original English version may come with a Spanish audio option on the DVD you should be able to find this information on the sales page. Watching a movie or TV series in Spanish that you already know well in English is excellent practice. If you make friends with native speakers, you should ask for suggestions on their favourite shows and consider watching them originally in Spanish, rather than just watching dubbed versions of American or British shows. This will help you understand more of Spanish culture as well. Listen to Spanish music. You can find many stations in Spanish on TuneIn. I find that love songs tend to be sung slower and are easier to follow. Use a podcast directed at Spanish learners. My favourite by far is SpanishPod I like that it separates language levels according to the CEFR scale. Essentially, it starts at the lowest levels, playing a very brief conversation and explaining every aspect of it, so that when you re-listen to the dialogue at the end of the lesson you understand it much better. As you advance through the levels, it gets progressively harder and the speakers increase the speed at which they speak. I generally try to aim for one level higher than my current one, to push myself. Study Spanish audio at different speeds. You can take audio from a naturally spoken podcast, recording of a radio show, or interview and slow it down using the free tool Audacity. My New Guide to Learning Spanish Yes, Spaniards speak fast, but Spanish can be easy to learn if you think about it in the right way, and if you have the right approach. This blog post is an extract from my language hacking guide Why Spanish is Easy. Pick up your own copy here! Benny believes the best approach to language learning is to speak from day one.
