Flag There are many benefits to be gained from the use of lemons. You can cook with them, use lemons to clean the microwave, and use lemon juice on your face. Cut them into wedges and de-seed them. Toss them into a freezer proof bag or container. Whenever I need a lemon in my drink, I add the frozen wedges. No need to thaw, use them frozen. I have my best results keeping lemons fresh even halved by wrapping first in good paper toweling, and then in wax paper, and keeping them in my fruit bin. I enjoy having cut up lemon in my Coke, lemonade, water, etc. However, often before I get the whole lemon used up, it becomes brown and soft. Now I quarter each lemon slice, lay it in a single layer on a cookie sheet, freeze,. Then I put them in a zip lock bag and return them to the freezer. I can buy lemons now when they are a good price, and freeze them and keep them handy! I love lemons, if for nothing else other than for a facial astringent and putting down my garbage disposal. I also like to use them on my salmon fish and in water. With all of this in mind, this is how I freeze them. Slices need to be cut, put on paper towels to soak up not all the wonderful juice but the extra that makes it almost impossible to enjoy once you take them out of the freezer. I make a slit in those before I freeze one. The ones you are using in quarters or halves do exactly the same thing. Of course wash before starting to get ready for freezing. I find using before totally thawed lemon is best. Unless you are going to just squeeze them over salmon fish or for lemonade in the winter, then you can just wash, cut in two and put in a bag. I cut off a corner of a baggie and squeeze right through the bag to avoid any extra mess. You still can go back for the pulp. I slice all my lemons. Then I will wrap two or three slices together in Sarah Wrap. You can wrap more if you like. When I need lemon slices I just take out one of the little packages and the lemons are as fresh as when I sliced them. Do not wrap all your lemon slices together because you will have one big frozen lemon ball. I juice my lemons and put one cup at a time in zip lock bags for lemonade and recipes. If you freeze lemon juice in ice cubes, and then take the cubes and put a number of them in a zip lock bag, you can take out small amounts when you need them. I also freeze the rinds in a bag. I also put the flush frozen lemon rinds down my disposal with hot water to fresh my disposal and kitchen. I take the lazy way out - I freeze lemons and limes whole, untouched. I find that when I thaw them, they are easy to squeeze, and give a lot of juice. I buy them when they are on sale, and then I have them on hand at all times. I have never had a problem with doing it this way. Fresh lemon juice and lemon zest can be pretty pricey most of the year, but I eliminate this consideration by freezing the juice and zest when lemons are on sale. You can buy lemons in the winter when they are cheap and freeze the juice in ice-cube trays. One ice-cube section equals about 1 tablespoon of juice. Squeeze all the lemons until you having nothing but juice, get rid of all seeds. Pour the juice into clean ice cube trays and freeze cubes until solid. Store lemon cubes in a Ziploc freezer bag and now you have cubes to make a pitcher of fresh lemon aid. Place the lemon cubes in a pitcher and defrost, then add cold water and some sugar to taste. My husband and I purchased a whole box of fresh lemons from a fruit vendor at a flea market and a friend told me about juicing the lemons and freezing the juice in ice cube trays. Simmer for 5 additional minutes. Remove from heat; stir in lemon juice and zest. Cool to room temperature. Divide mixture evenly among three tubs. Shave; scoop into small cups and serve with a spoon or straw. You may wish to garnish with a small thin slice of lemon. Instant Lemonade You can mix 4 cups of lemon juice with 4 cups of sugar and stir to blend the mixture. Then put in a plastic tub and keep in the freezer. You can scoop a tablespoon or two anytime the mixture does not freeze hard, but stays soft because of the sugar in a tall glass and add cold water to make yourself an instant lemonade or dilute a greater amount in a pitcher for a crowd. Squeeze all lemons, pour juice into ice cubes trays, freeze solid and store them in a plastic bag in your freezer. Grate lemon rinds and keep in refrigerator for recipes. Fresh lemons make the best

Lemonade Day done wrong Instead of teaching a kid about running a business, she got a lesson in government regulation. May 01, By Nicolas S. Martin My 8-year-old recently got the lemonade stand itch. So we started laying plans to enrich her college fund by enticing passers-by with white chocolate-pistachio cookies and juice from organic lemons. Fortunately, our property backs onto one of the busiest paved urban trails in America, bustling on weekends with cyclists, rollerbladers and pedestrians. Visions of dollars danced in our heads. Googling for the perfect lemonade recipe, we soon found a site promoting a May 1 "national" event called Lemonade Day. This event, organizers say, is an "initiative designed to teach kids how to start, own and operate their own business" a lemonade stand. After shopping for her raw materials, I gave my kid a bedtime primer about starting a business. How much profit do you make after expenses? How should you promote your business? Give the customer a great product. She soaked it up and went to sleep all inspiration and smiles. My first call was to the parks department, which maintains the trail. That agency is a sponsor of the local Lemonade Day, but, alas, does not permit lemonade stands on its properties any other day of the year. They would be "dangerous"; accidents would happen. Do they expect any accidents on Lemonade Day, I asked? Our best option for a profitable lemonade stand was gone. My next calls were to the health department, where I eventually found an official who cheerfully told me that, except on Lemonade Day, no child can legally operate a lemonade stand in our city. As far as she is concerned, Lemonade Day itself is just food poisoning waiting to happen. The kid would be instructed to shut down his stand. If he refused to obey, the police would be called to cite the child for violating the health code, which applies to children no less than to adults. Most likely, no official would brave public ridicule for lowering the boom on a kid with a lemonade stand. But a parent might be a less controversial target for enforcement penalties, which could include fines and even jail time. From time to time, zealous officials do force kids to shut down their lemonade stands. Even Girl Scouts have gotten into trouble for selling cookies in front of homes and businesses. What the Lemonade Day organizers should teach the children, said the health official, is about the importance of learning and obeying the government regulations that prohibit lemonade stands. If we had made it past the health and parks departments, my kid would have been stymied by zoning laws that prohibit lemonade stands in residential neighborhoods. Overcoming that barrier, we would have hung our heads at the daunting costs of business and vending licenses, not to mention taxes. Lemonade Day is promoted as a way to "inspire a budding entrepreneur! It is about how even the most harmless enterprise, the humble lemonade stand, has been sacrificed on the altar of government regulation. Learning to be an entrepreneur "starts with a lemonade stand," say the organizers of Lemonade Day. They tell me it is "silly" and "beside the point" to focus on the regulations. I am told that Lemonade Day is about kids learning to "give back to their communities," "do better in school" and "open bank accounts. That is the old American way, but the new way is living with rules that banish the lemonade stand to one government-approved day a year. What are my kid and I going to do on Lemonade Day? We are going to set up a stand in one of the permitted locations" in a park or at one of the approved sponsors" with hundreds of other kids doing the same thing. But our "secret ingredient" is that we will hand out leaflets explaining why operating a lemonade stand makes my kid and yours not just a hopeful entrepreneur, but an actual lawbreaker. Next year they should rename it Regulation Day.

Anna XXX The young girl sat by the large window of her home, gazing out onto the snowy fields on her property. She had short black hair in a messy up-do, deep greenish blue eyes and lightly tanned skin. Then, a rough knocking came at the back door, and Bella rose to get it, seeing it was her Sawsbuck Flower, in winter form of course. Would you like that? Just like when you were a tiny little Deerling! Flower blushed warmly, feeling her loins tingle and her pink folds become more pronounced on the underside of her body. She shivered, realising she was now entering her heat cycle and needed to mate, but the Sawsbuck she had fallen for last mating season had lost interest in her and mated with another. Once Bella had put her cooking skills to good use, dinner was made and they both ate, going to the large bedroom in the back of the house to go to bed. Bella changed into her pyjamas; a scant-lace lingere item that showed off her large DD breasts and round behind, laying down in bed with Flower on the end feigning sleep. What are you d-doing? Uhâ€¦ ohâ€¦ that feels kind of niceâ€¦ wait! What are you doing? How long have you felt this way? The Grass-Normal type nodded to the picture frame by the bed, and the jet haired girl smile. Iâ€¦ I love you too! Flower nodded quickly, unsure of where to start. Excited, the Sawsbuck dove forward, her large wet tongue lapping at the folds of the human she loved so dearly, the unique delicious taste on her tongue. A good few moments of this later, Bella gasped softly as she realised her orgasm was closing in. Trust me girl, this will feel amazing! She positioned herself over her Pokemon, lowering herself down until their moist lower lips rubbed together. Bella shuddered, feeling fluids leak from her love canal at such a fluidity it made her blush. Aaahhhâ€¦ g-gonna cumâ€¦ ahâ€¦ w-what about you? But Flower was close too, both of them being virgin. They shared one last passionate kiss before falling deep asleep, the sound of hailstones gently pelting down outside lulling them to sleep.
