Acting on the right decision Drive learned from ants Traditionally, many young boys are assigned to do chores as they grow up. My younger brother and I were no exception. One of our chores was washing the car. Often times, while washing the car, I would notice ant hills in the cracks of our drive way. I would use the water hose to wash away the sand, and before I could even get the car dried off, those ants would be diligently rebuilding their ant hill. There was no slackness in them at all. Those little creatures seemed to be little, invincible machines that would never quit until their appointed task was accomplished. It is no wonder the Bible tells us to, "Go to the ant, thou sluggard; consider her ways, and be wise: Which having no guide, overseer, or ruler, Provideth her meat in the summer, and gathereth her food in the harvest" Proverbs 6: Source Ants seemed to be like little, invincible machines that would never quit until their appointed task was accomplished. By observing ants, I learned the life lesson of drive. Drive causes you to: Be active in doing and accomplishing Be whole-hearted in your effort Put a constant prod on yourself Not give in to the impulse to be slack Ants are not slack. They constantly build, and begin to immediately rebuild, even after their structures have been inadvertently or purposely washed away. There was a time in my life when I wanted to be a veterinarian or a scientist. I out grew that notion, but along the way I collected and observed various insects and other creatures. I kept Homer in a nice, little, turtle lagoon and everything seemed to be going well until that fateful day, when I was at home, reading aloud, some information about turtles. As I read over a passage about turtles carrying certain diseases, my dad overheard. Suddenly, I could feel the silence as everything seemed to come to a screeching halt. In a baritone voice, never to be reckoned with, my dad turned to me and said, "You have got to get that thing out of here. Thankfully, my ninth grade science teacher agreed to accept Homer as a donation to the school. Things worked out well. Homer ended up in a fine, turtle aquarium that was located in one of the science class rooms. He even had a turtle roommate to keep company with. The life lesson I learned from having to give up my turtle was preparation. I should have done my research and educated myself about turtles and how to care for them before I got one. I believe my parents would not have reacted so quickly about getting rid of my hard shelled, reptilian, little friend if they felt that I knew how to care for and be safe with the creatures. Being properly prepared means: You have acquired the additional education needed to do or care for something. You have acquired what is needed to be successful in what you are doing. You have gained mentorship or experience that will help you to do things properly. The Fish Lesson of Termination As is the case for many youngsters, my siblings and I had pet fish while we were growing up. I believe that one of the most interesting and relaxing things you can do is to observe fish as they peacefully swim around in a bowl or in an aquarium. Our childhood consisted of pet gold fish fresh water fish and pet tropical fish salt water fish. One life lesson that can be learned by owning pet fish is the life lesson of termination. I discovered that you can easily over feed them, or put them in the wrong kind of environment and before you know it, you might see them "belly up," floating in the water. Source Many a small child has had a burial at sea the toilet ocean for their pet fish. In so doing, many for the first time, experience the termination of a living thing that they love. As an individual experiences the demise of a small, scaly, friend they realize that nothing in this life lasts forever. Owning fish can prove to be a poignant life lesson in the termination of all material things. Many a small child has had a burial at sea the toilet ocean for their pet fish. The life lesson of termination teaches: Nothing in this life lasts forever. Look beyond the physical. Follow the success law of having contact with and the guidance and continual help of God. Seek treasures that lead to higher, spiritual goals that will always last and not terminate. The University of Earth As we look around us, we can see that the earth, and everything that inhabits the earth, seem to be a part of a huge school or learning facility. Life lessons can be learned from the greatest of creatures to the smallest of creatures. The human language is inundated with proof, that we are learning life lessons, from the many living organisms that dwell on the planet. By observing or interacting with pets and other sundry creatures, we can learn:
