Catholic Encyclopedia "Litany of Loreto Article Despite the fact that, from the seventeenth century onwards, the Litany of Loreto has been the subject of endless panegyrics and ascetical writings, there is a great lack of documentary evidence concerning its origin, the growth and development of the litany into the forms under which we know it, and as it was for the first time definitely approved by the Church in the year . . . Some writers declare that they know nothing of its origin and history; others, on the contrary, trace it back to the translation of the Holy House ; others, to Pope Sergius I ; others, again, to Saint Gregory the Great or to the fifth century; while others go as far back as the earliest ages of the Church, and even Apostolic times. Historical criticism, however, proves it to be of more recent origin, and shows that it was composed during the early years of the sixteenth century or the closing years of the fifteenth. The most ancient printed copy hitherto discovered is that of Dillingen in Germany, dating from 1518; it is fairly certain that this is a copy of an earlier Italian one, but so far, in spite of much careful research, the oldest Italian copy that the writer has been able to discover dates from 1476. In form, the Litany of Loreto is composed on a fixed plan common to several Marian litanies already in existence during the second half of the fifteenth century, which in turn are connected with a notable series of Marian litanies that began to appear in the twelfth century and became numerous in the thirteenth and fourteenth. The Loreto text had, however, the good fortune to be adopted in the famous shrine, and in this way to become known, more than any other, to the many pilgrims who flocked there during the sixteenth century. The text was brought home to the various countries of Christendom, and finally it received for all time the supreme ecclesiastical sanction. This laus of fifty-nine eulogies on the Virgin occurs on fol. 10v. But it has not at all the form of a litany, being rather a sequence of fervent praises, like so many that occur in the writings of the Fathers, especially after the fourth century. As a matter of fact, Dr. . . . It is fairly long, and was published in part by Mone, and in its entirety by the present writer. Then, after this manner of the litanies of the saints, a series of petitions occur, e. . . . Lengthy and involved litanies of this type do not seem to have won popularity, though it is possible to find other examples of a like kind. However, during the two centuries that followed, many Marian litanies were composed. Their form remains uncertain and hesitating, but the tendency is always towards brevity and simplicity. The petitions are often omitted or are changed into ejaculations in honour of the Blessed Virgin. It is found, though with occasional variants, in many manuscripts, a sure sign that this text was especially well known and favourably received. Here is a short specimen, showing the praises to be met with most frequently also in other litanies of that or of later times: The first Marian litanies must have been composed to foster private devotion, as it is not at all probable that they were written for use in public, by reason of their drawn-out and heavy style. But once the custom grew up of reciting Marian litanies privately, and of gradually shortening the text, it was not long until the idea occurred of employing them for public devotion, especially in cases of epidemic, as had been the practice of the Church with the litanies of the Saints, which were sung in penitential processions and during public calamities. Hence it must be emphasized that the earliest certain mention we have of a public recital of Marian Litanies is actually related to a time of pestilence, particularly in the fifteenth century. An incunabulum of the Casanatensian Library in Rome, which contains the Venice litanies referred to above, introduces them with the following words: At Venice, in fact, these same litanies were finally adopted for liturgical use in processions for plague and mortality and asking for rain or for fair weather. In the second half of the fifteenth century we meet another type of litany which was to be publicly chanted tempore pestis sive epydemic. Sancta mater Creatoris; Sancta mater Salvatoris; Sancta mater munditie; Sancta mater auxilii; Sancta mater consolationis; Sancta mater intemerata; Sancta mater inviolata; Sancta mater virginum, etc. At the end, however, are a few short petitions such as those found in the litanies of the saints. Before going further, it may be well to say a few words on the composition of the litanies we have been considering. With regard to their content, which consists mainly of praises of the Blessed Virgin, it would seem to have been taken not so much from the Scriptures and the Fathers, at least directly, as from popular medieval Latin poetry. In the earlier and longer litanies whole rhythmic strophes are to be found, taken bodily from such poetry, and employed as praises of the Blessed Virgin. With regard to their form, it is certain that those who first composed the Marian litanies aimed at imitating the litanies of the Saints which had been in use in the Church since the eighth century. They had a model in the Kyrie of the Mass, e. Thus the Marian litany was evolved. This made up the new group of litanies which we must now consider. The connecting link between the litanies we have discussed and this new group may have been a litany found in a manuscript of prayers, copied in by Fra Giovanni da Falerona. But, because of its archaic form, this litany must be considerably anterior to , and may have been copied from some fifteenth-century manuscript. The praises are chosen in part from previous litanies, and in part they are original. Moreover, their arrangement is better and more varied. Two new titles are introduced: This litany is the shortest of all and the closest in similarity to that of Loreto. This form of litany was widely circulated, both in script and in print, during the sixteenth century. A comparison of the texts will show that they contain the praises in the Loreto Litany, with two exceptions: So far no manuscript of the Loreto Litany has been discovered, but it cannot be doubted that it is nothing more than a happy arrangement of a text belonging to the last group. And, moreover, it may be laid down as probable that the Loreto text became customary in the Holy House towards the close of the fifteenth century, at a time when in other places similar litanies were being adapted for public use to obtain deliverance from some calamity. It is only in , , and , that the documents afford indications of litanies being sung in that sanctuary, though the text is not given. The earliest printed copy of the Litany of Loreto so far known is that of Dillingen, which is undated and seems to belong to the end of or the beginning of Paulus, following up a discovery made by Gass, has observed, it was probably published and circulated in Germany by Blessed Canisius. We find this title in a Litany of Loreto printed in Maria Auxiliatrix 24 May ; and to this conclusion the Dillingen text adds indisputable evidence. The Litany of Loreto had taken root at Loreto, and was being spread throughout the world, when it ran the grave risk of being lost forever. It would seem that this action on the part of the pope led the clergy of Loreto to fear that the text of their litany was likewise prohibited. At all events, in order to keep up the old time custom of singing the litany every Saturday in honour of the Blessed Virgin, a new text was drawn up containing praises drawn directly from the Scriptures, and usually applied to the Bl. Virgin in the Liturgy of the Church. This new litany was set to music by the choirmaster of the Basilica of Loreto, Costanzo Porta, and printed at Venice in . It is the earliest setting to music of a Marian litany that we know of. In the following year these Scriptural litanies were printed in two different handbooks for the use of pilgrims. In both they bear the title: The judgment concludes that the litany might be sung at Loreto as a devotion proper to this shrine, and if others wanted to adopt it they might do so by way of private devotion. This attempt having failed, the Scriptural litany straightway began to lose favour, and the Loreto text was once more resumed. In another manual for pilgrims, published by Angelita in that same year , the Scriptural litany is omitted, and the old Loreto text appears with the title: From this it is clear that for a time both litanies were in use at Loreto. On the strength of this impulse given to the Litany of Loreto, certain ascetical writers began to publish a great number of litanies in honour of the Saviour, the B. Virgin, and the saints, often ill-advised and containing expressions theologically incorrect, so that Pope Clement VIII had promulgated 6 Sept. Maria Maggiore by Cardinal Francesco Toledo in ; and Paul V, in , ordered it to be sung in that church, morning and evening, on Saturdays and on vigils and feasts of the Madonna. As a result of this example the Loreto Litany began to be used, and is still largely used, in all the churches of Rome. This last invocation was originally granted by Pius IX to the Bishop of Mechlin in , and, after the definition of the Immaculate Conception , the congregation by various rescripts authorized many dioceses to make a like addition, so that in a short time it became the universal practice.
