The Quran is divided into surahs (chapters) and further divided into ayat (verses). The real translation of the word, ayat, is actually "a sign". For a preliminary discussion about the chronological order of chapters see page Surah.

Etymology[edit] The word surah was used at the time of Muhammad as a term with the meaning of a chapter or a portion of the Quran. This is evidenced by the appearance of the word sura in multiple locations in the Quran such as verse Say, "Then bring ten surahs like it and call upon whomever you can besides God, if you are truthful. History of the Quran Chapters in the Quran are not arranged in the chronological order of revelation , and the precise order has eluded scholars. According to tradition, Muhammad told his companions the traditional placement of every Wahy as he revealed it, [7] and Wm Theodore de Bary , an East Asian studies expert, describes that "The final process of collection and codification of the Quran text was guided by one over-arching principle: For this reason, no attempt was made to edit the numerous revelations, organize them into thematic units, or present them in chronological order As no transmitted reports dating back to the time of Muhammad or his companions exists, their works necessarily represent the opinions of scholars, and none originates before the first quarter of the 8th century. One version is given in a 15th-century work by Abd al-Kafi, and is included in the chronological order given by the standard Egyptian edition of the Quran Yet another, from the 10th century, is given by Ibn Nadim. This method is of limited usefulness because the Quran narrates the life of Muhammad or the early history of the Muslim community only incidentally and not in detail. Tripartite chapters open with a short warning, followed by one or more narratives about unbelievers, and finally address contemporaries of Muhammad and invite them to Islam. On the other hand, Madinan verses are longer and have a distinct style of rhyming and concern to provide legislation and guidance for the Muslim community. He classified the Quran into three main periods: He then rearranged these blocks approximately in order of increasing average verse length. This order he proposes is the chronological order. Bazargan assumed that verse length tended to increase over time and he used this assumption to rearrange the passages. According to Robinson, the problem of the chronology of authorship is still far from solved. Muhammad, as we find in some reports in hadith , used to refer to shorter chapters not by name, rather by their first verse. They used this same method to name Quranic chapters. Most chapter names are found in hadith. Some were named according to their central theme, such as Al-Fatiha The Opening and Yusuf Joseph , and some were named for the first word at the beginning of the chapter, such as Qaf, Ya-Sin, and ar-Rahman. Most chapter names are still used to this day. Several are known by multiple names: There are two points of view regarding coherence of the verses of the Quran. In the first viewpoint each chapter of the Quran has a central theme and its verses are related. The second viewpoint considers some chapters of the Quran as collections of passages which are not thematically related. Chapters deal with various subjects, for instance chapter 99, which comprises only eight verses, is devoted exclusively to eschatology and chapter 12 narrates a story, while other chapters, in the same breath, speak of theological, historical, and ethico-legal matters. Chapters are known to consist of passages, not only verses. The borders between passages are arbitrary but are possible to determine. For example, chapter 54 [15] may be divided into six passages: Then how strict has been our recompense and warnings The earliest Quranic interpreter known to have paid attention to this aspect of the Quran is Fakhruddin al-Razi d. Fakhr Razi believed that text relation is a meaning that links verses together or mentally associates them like cause-effect or reason-consequence. He linked verse 1 of a chapter to verse 2, verse 2 to verse 3 and so on, and rejected traditionist interpretations if they contradicted interrelations between verses. Zarkashi aimed at showing how important understanding the inter-verse relations is to understanding the Quran, however, he did not attempt to deal with one complete chapter to show its relations. For example, Hamid Farrahi d. Farrahi believed that the whole structure of the Quran is thematically coherent, which is to say, all verses of a chapter of the Quran are integrally related to each other to give rise to the major theme of the chapter and again all of the chapters are interconnected with each other to constitute the major theme of the Quran. According to Farrahi, each chapter has a central theme umud or pillar around which the verses revolve: It is only lack of consideration and analysis on our part that they seem disjointed and incoherent Each chapter imparts a specific message as its central theme. The completion of this theme marks the end of the chapter. A single wall must contain a single city in it. What is the use of a wall encompassing different cities? He believed that a repertory of familiar themes runs through the whole Quran and each chapter elaborates one of more, often many of, them. She believes that Meccan chapters are coherent units. El-Awa provides a detailed analysis in terms of coherence theory on chapters 33 and 75 and shows that these two chapters cohere and have a main contextual relationship. According to Gheitury and Golfam for the Quran there is no preface, no introduction, no beginning, no end, a reader can start reading from anywhere in the text.
