A recent email request from a visitor to this site prompted me to look into the question. I am certainly no economist. I researched the web looking for data. Other information is from my own experience. The answer depends on where you want to live in the state. Just as is the case when buying real estate, location is everything. Just where you decide to put down roots makes a big difference in that figure. The more desirable locations naturally have a higher cost of living. Housing, food, energy and medical care all cost more along the coasts of the state. Move inland, the rates drop. But the interior of the state does not offer all that much in the way of things to do unless you are into farming and ranching. For the most part, it costs more to live on the Gulf of Mexico coast than it does to live on the Atlantic Coast. Car insurance rates are higher here as is wind insurance for your home. Read more about home insurance costs. Food prices in our area are substantially more than what they are in our home state of Pennsylvania. On a recent trip north, we went to a grocery store to purchase a beef roast, potatoes and rolls. Eating in restaurants is pretty much the same, especially in eateries in popular tourist spots. For many items, the price drops once the snow-birds the winter residents leave. Restaurants start to offer discounts on meals, the grocery stores offer deals on food and many entertainment venues cut their rates. While I am not a golfer, I do see the ads for reduced fees on many golf courses during the summer season. We moved to Florida to escape the cold northern winters and have not regretted it. In our area, the cost of living is more than what we had in Pennsylvania, but the quality of life is so much better. As in most things in life, you get what you pay for. Take a trip to the state and drive around, ask questions of the locals. Most people have moved here from another state, they are pretty willing to share their experiences. I never took up golf; there are too many other ways to get frustrated in life.

Florida is one of the top dream living destinations, with its beautiful shorelines and glorious tourist activities. It is also an area of potential severe weather threats, scorching suns, and insects galore.

OccupyTheory on 30 January, at It is also an area of potential severe weather threats, scorching suns, and insects galore. Decide if Florida is really the place you dream of by reading these pros and cons by longtime residents of the sunshine state. Florida is an absolutely amazing place to be and many residents simply love living here. In most areas of Florida the current housing market is extremely cheap with average purchase prices being in the fifty thousand dollar region on decent homesteads. There are no state income tax in Florida, allowing for prices to be even lower and keeping more of your hard earned dollars in your wallet. And swimming, beaches, parks, theme parks, snorkeling. There is just about any activity year round that you prefer to enjoy on a sunny day. Visiting a theme park during the off season is phenomenal, a completely different experience than during tourist season. An experience you have to live in Florida to truly recognize. Florida boasts many hidden springs that have underwater caves that are amazing to explore while snorkeling. The beautiful weather allows Florida to provide the entire country with oranges. Rainstorms in Florida typically last no longer than a couple of hours. Florida is home to Cape Canaveral. An awesome experience for the entire family, so close to home. Another beautiful, close to home attraction that becomes so easy to explore when you live in Florida are the Everglades. The wildlife and nature in the Everglades are so diverse it is mind blowing. And while we are discussing the amazing close to home attractions, Florida also contains the Morikami Museum. This museum is the only one in the entire county that is dedicated solely to the living culture of Japan. And yes, while you may visit some of these spots as a tourist, there is no experience like the one you will receive during the off season as a resident of Florida. Florida is the sunshine state, boasting the best of what is under the sun. Florida is known worldwide as the sunshine state, but some residents believe that the name was adopted during the treacherous summer months of June, July, and August where it becomes so hot and humid that it literally feels as though you are living on the surface of the sun. While the housing market is nice in Florida, you will most likely end up desiring a much larger home that will be drastically raising those mortgage payments. This is due to the fact that once you live in Florida, it is guaranteed that every family member and friend you have known will be calling on you to host them while they vacation to this fabulous sunshine state. It can be extremely hard to tell Nana no, so expect to be opening up your own privately run and personally funded bed and breakfast. Another downfall of those seemingly inexpensive housing prices, the insurance to cover houses in Florida is astronomical. And that is when you can find a home insurance company that will even offer you insurance. If you are lucky enough to dodge both of those bullets you could end up struggling to pay those bills simply for lack of funds. The job market in Florida is even lower than the housing market making it very difficult to find work, let alone steady work, in the sunshine state. While the weather may appear pleasant with an average of eighty degree temps, the average is not the norm. The peninsula of Florida has a huge hurricane potential. While this may be hit and miss, if you are a resident of Florida you will most likely experience a largely destructive hurricane. Once you have become accustomed to the heat and humidity of Florida anything below sixty degrees will feel like you are freezing to death. The water bugs, mosquitoes, snakes, and other creepy crawly slippery slimy creatures are everywhere. These bugs and snakes have lived in the ultimate climate for year round growth potential. And that is not even going into the alligators. As a resident of Florida, be prepared to watch out for alligators on the way to the mailbox, the car, the bathroom, and literally every other place you may step during your waking hours. In Summary Truthfully, there are pros and cons to anywhere, which is just the natural way of things. Now that you have the down low from true residents of Florida you can decide if the sunshine state is really for you or not. The most important thing before moving to a new region is to do your homework. Research the state diligently studying the culture, weather conditions, dangers, and benefits. It is also important to find information regarding the specific city in which you are looking to live in and learn what type of culture you will be facing as well as the school systems and crime rates.
