I like Lonely Planet because they are sturdy, jam packed with information which is important when space and weight are factors , and fairly thorough. This Lonely Planet is no exception. Lonely Planet is based in Oakland. This is about San Francisco. One thinks they ought to get this one right, out of any other guidebook. The information is spot on. The tone is decidedly liberal. This has been criticized in other reviews, but I think it is important since it reflects the attitude of the city. Yes, San Franciscans think exactly that way. The tone of the book is the tone of the people. There are decent maps for each neighborhood, and one pull out map in the back. I would expect this guidebook to be on par with the Washington DC guidebook wherein all the maps are conveniently in the back in one place, and everything is cross referenced easily. You read it, it tells you what map, what page, and what site number. Flip to that map, bingo. Flip to that page, bingo. This one keeps you flipping and turning without the benefit of the cross referencing. So all in all an accurate and useful guidebook. Information is accurate, maps are decent. Worthy of the LP label.
