Before we dive into just how to make a family tree chart, we will take you through the meaning of a family tree chart. What is a Family Tree and Why is it Important? The family tree is, however, the most common tool and can be used by both children and adults. The chart represents the family relationships in an easy to follow structure. This layout enables the viewer with a quick glance to establish which family members preceded which generation. This is made simple due to its structure as each generation is above or below the preceding or next generation on the family tree. The most common details included in the family tree include names, date of birth, date of death, birthplace and other information or data depending on the complexity of the family tree. For example, a close line between two boxes indicates a marriage, while a long line may represent a sibling. How to make a family tree chart How to Make a Family Tree Chart The following steps below will guide you through the creation of your family tree chart. Also provided below is a template which already provides you with a nice starting point for your family tree. Alternatively, use online family tree software to create and print your family tree. Step 1 – Deciding on the Number of Generations This is normally the first step in the process. Once you have decided on the generations begin to draw boxes to represent each family member. You should represent each member of your family with a box. Start with yourself and draw your parents above you, a box for each parent. Draw your siblings to each side of you, a box for each sibling. Next, add spouses to each family member with a spouse. Next, add children to each couple with children. Each connection or relationship should be displayed through the use of a line going directly from box to box. Step 3 – Adding the Detail. You can now begin to add family members details to your family tree chart. Also, ensure you do include images in your chart. This may be accomplished through the use of software or simply cutting and attaching your image to a physical family tree. It is important that your tree remains structured and each layer of your family tree chart is related to a specific family generation. Photos of family optional What You Do: Have your child lay his arm, from elbow to finger tip, on a piece of brown paper. Be sure his fingers are spread apart to allow you to trace in between each one! Trace his arm, from elbow all the way up to his fingers and in between each finger, using a marker or pencil. This will be the outline of the tree. If you get the green light, have your child help you trace it. When the tree is all traced, help your child cut it out. Have your child draw some leaf shapes on the green construction paper and cut them out. Now the fun part: Once you have all the names you want to use, make sure you have enough leaves one for each family member. Ask the child to write the name on the leaf if he is writing already or have him tell you the name and write it down. Glue the leaves onto the branches fingers of the tree. This will serve as the stand for the tree. Place a good amount of glue along one side of the paper towel roll. Then press the tree against the paper towel roll as if to give it a backbone. It should be standing straight up, like a tree. If you have small photos of your family, cut them out into small sizes and glue them around the branches. To make it even more special, try dangling the photos from the branches using string. Punch a hole in the tree branches and tie the string through the hole. Glue the end of the string to the photo, and you have dangling photos of the family hanging from the tree.

Chapter 4 : Family Tree Templates

The "Family tree chart" template is a simple spreadsheet with colored cells to outline a family tree. There is only room for yourself and four generations of direct ancestors. This makes it a good choice for school projects, but not extended genealogy research.

It is important in establishing lineages in a conventional tree format. In medicine, the detailed pedigree charts are referred to as genograms. There are hierarchical, matrix and horizontal types of family trees. We will be creating the hierarchical type particularly today using the instrumentality of Microsoft Word application. Go to the office button click on it at the drop down of option; select new, then click on blank document option. Step 2 Click the insert option on the tool bar. Select the Smart Art button and click. This will open a drop down options box for you to make your choice. Step 4 You have to start your family-line from naming members from as far as you can remember. In the topmost box or shape specify the name of your earliest ancestor – in this case, Tom. Type the name directly into the shape or box on the family tree diagram. Step 5 Drag down the next shape or box and place it below the previous box. Type in the name of the next family member who was born after Tom. Additionally you can input other relevant details about the members along with their names – date of birth, place of birth etc. Doing so will tell you which ribbon is active. If you click elsewhere, the ribbon will not appear. When the ribbon appears, you can personalize the tree further. As you add boxes to the tree, Microsoft Word automatically adjusts the tree smaller so it stays within the size you create on the page. Trees with many branches, leaves and levels may have small type. Choose color to suit your preference. Step 10 You can add images too. The process is simple.
