I hope you feel loved and celebrated today. I hope you are appreciated and are able to appreciate your blessings as a mom. Yesterday I shared some words of wisdom from a dear friend. Today I have a post I want to share written by one of the most precious women in my life. God has used Kelly in my life in so many ways. We met Kelly and her husband during a very formative time for us – our college years. As a dating and then engaged couple we really learned a lot about marriage from Kelly and Adam. I loved babysitting their awesome kids and seeing how they parented. That was before they lost 2 of their sons. And before we lost Gabriel. Tommy and I also believe that the example of how these two walked through that paved the way for how we would walk through losing our child. God has used them in big ways in our lives, and we are so thankful to know them. Kelly is a wonderful mama, and I look up to her so much. I hope you will read these words that she has written. I was incredibly moved by them. As I read her post I realized that I have been off track. His heart is the most important thing to me, and I am so thankful for the reminder of that and the awesome privilege it is to be his mama. Moment by moment as they change, I am offered the priceless invitation to grow right alongside them. So, before I launch into what being a mommy means to me – I feel led to begin with what I know it is not. Being a mommy is NOT about being an expert or getting it perfect. In our crazy, wild home, being a mommy means knowing my 4 Smalls have just as much if not more to teach me – than I have to teach them. It means advocating health on ALL levels spiritual, emotional, physical and mental. It means super- raggedy homeschooling. It means equipping and celebrating successes in the midst of giant failures. It means modeling out respect and honor beginning with my relationship with their daddy. It means publicly grieving over pain filled losses as well as publicly belly laughing as I play. And, not only do I deeply desire the grace-gift they carry, I desperately need it. And yet somehow I feel like I know less than ever before. Being a mommy means an abundance of grace-exchanges. But, today, I am just thankful to have the opportunity to sit under some of the most powerful, little teachers my heart has ever known. Thank you, Kelly, for sharing your words and wisdom! She has been a rock for me my whole life. She works hard and is so respected and loved by all of us. Last year was awful. But it was a very hard day. I know there are many reasons for people to be sad today.

Cats Ah, the decorated house at Christmas! See the cat in the wing chair? The Christmas tree with its fragrant pine needles. Those needles will kill your cat!! The Christmas tree water? Full of bacteria and toxic tree sap and if you use a chemical preservative? That can kill your cat! That should be safe. Artificial snow is toxic. The shiny tinsel on the tree. Yep, check, that can kill your cat. That woman is teaching her innocent child the best way to murder Fluffy. Those popcorn and cranberry garlands? Just waiting to become obstructions in the intestinal tract. Prepare for your house to look like an abattoir as Fluffy tracks blood from her cut pads all over. The wire hangars attaching them to the tree can kill your cat. Extension cords for the pretty lights? Cat chews on it, cats gets electrified. The pretty lights get hot. Cat gets a burned nose. The amaryllis plant some lame secret Santa gave you at the office party? Ribbons and string on parcels? Adhesives and glues on that craftily wrapped present? I guess he got tragically close to that beautiful Christmas tree candle. Oh well, he may be a pile of ashes now, but at least we saved on paying a vet bill for the blockage caused by the ribbons. Oh look, so cute! The cat is on the counter eating the turkey carcass. Pancreatitis will make an appearance before Santa! The sugar in chocolate and candy canes okay, more a dog thing, but cats will eat those shiny wrappers will also bring a visit to the vet, if not death from toxic shock, as will the Xylitol in the sugar free gum you put in the stockings and the perfume and aftershave you buy for Memaw and Pop Pop every goddam year. If the cat gets into it, curtains. Is Christmas really just an obstacle course of deathtraps for your cat? We did eventually give up on having a Christmas tree, but that was after our resident cat population got to ten. With so many of them intent on climbing it, tipping it over and knocking ornaments off of it, we just gave up. Cats do eat tinsel and other stringy things and get blockages. They can get sick from toxic substances and they can get pancreatitis if you overindulge them with treats. Exercise common sense and foresight. Use plastic twist ties to hold your ornaments on. Be vigilant about picking up stray berries or other parts of decorations that drop off and end up on the floor. Keep scanning your house and watching what your cat goes after. Then remove it, if it appears to pose a danger to the cat. And do I really have to say it?

Thanked 22 Times in 15 Posts My Mood: No Whining No Whining! Children enjoy the pictures and story while learning colors, numbers, and word association. Parents pick up ideas to apply with their own children in order to stop a child from whining. The story and illustrations present a strong sense of family values. Great social story for whining!!! I have twin 4 year olds who are constantly whining. This is a beautifully-written and illustrated book that teaches you get NOTHING when you whine, and you are rewarded for good behavior. I read it to my boys last night and they loved it. This morning, when one of my boys started whining, I said, "What do you get when you whine? A better way of writing childrens books This book is about Mamma cat, Daddy Cat and their 3 children and their adventures during a typical day. The book also teaches children a lesson about why it is not good behavior to whine. My daughter loves this book. We started reading it to her when she was about 16 months old. Her attention span was not quite ready at that time, but within a week or two she really started to love it. Now if we say "What do you get when you whine? She loves the cat family, the detailed colorful pictures, and all the places the cat family visits during the day. The pictures and plot are both different. The plot teaches my little girl how to behave and woven into the plot are simple learning activities like colors, numbers, large, small etc. The colors used in the pictures are interesting and bright but not neon and hyperactive like so many other childrens books. Also the pictures are made such that they look like each one was painted individually by hand from oil paints they have brush strokes. Finally I feel that this book will continue to be interesting to my daughter as she gets older.
