The author has said that Lydia is how she used to be and Bill represents how she is now on her bad days. Lydia thinks that things can turn around, is full of optimism and energy; Bill on the other hand, sees the kinds of things that can be fixed and those that cannot. This series has won quite a few awards since it started up. Shamus gave her another award in the year Rozan, this section will help with that. Bill Smith works undercover for a friend as he looks into thievery on the latest project that Crowell Construction is working on in Manhattan, which involves a forty story building. He has not laid bricks in quite a while but is able to look the part at least. All the while, he checks into the foreman who is a suspect. Heavy machinery as well as the operator of a crane has gone missing. A riot, one that was well orchestrated causes the foreman to die, supposedly accidentally. It pushes Bill into a tangled web of blackmail, bribery, as well as some blood while he is looking for answers. He has Lydia to help him follow the trail to organized crime at the heart stopping finish. Lydia is looking into a case that involves the threatening shifting power structure in Chinatown. A union organizer, as well as three other restaurant workers go missing, and the lawyer for the union tasks Lydia with the job of finding them. Lydia is called in by a powerful man in Chinatown, who also happens to be the prime suspect, with a job for her. He wants her to work for him and keep the search going, on his dime. Bill backs her up and she works as a dim sum waitress and slings dumplings. She dodges all kinds of conflict that could get her killed from the new and old orders. She keeps the search going for the missing waiters, not to mention their deadly secret. All before they get their final dinner. Bill Smith is in his cabin in the woodsy part of upstate New York, which is faraway from the mean streets in the city. It allows him to play Mozart on his piano and let nature heal him and make him better. These items are six paintings, that hide her secret that she has been keeping for decades. He agrees to do so. Lydia, once again, helps him out. There is corruption stinking up the place, they find and they search all over for the truth. The series is from the mystery and thriller genres of fiction. At the start of the series, Lydia is in her thirties, she is a Chinese American, and is a private investigator. She is a dutiful Chinese daughter, but is still an independent woman. Bill Smith at the beginning of the series is in his forties, an Army brat, and a private investigator. He plays piano for himself only and enjoys classical music. Bill is tough as nails against bad guys, but still has a warm heart. The books alternate point of view between the two characters Lydia narrates the odd numbered books and Bill narrates the even numbered books in first person. Rozan says that Lydia is her when she was that age, she thinks that the world is something that can be saved, full of energy and optimism and Bill is her now as she has gotten older on a bad day. Bill has been through enough in his life that he knows what things cannot happen. The series has won some awards. Novel in the year She would win another Shamus in in the same category. It took the Edgar best novel category , Nero Award for Excellence in the Mystery genre in the year , Macavity Award best mystery novel, in , and in the year it won a Maltese Falcon Award for best hard boiled novel in Japan. The series has also been nominated for many other awards. This novel is narrated by Lydia Chin. Not one of them is anything like P. Lydia Chin, she has a Chinese mother who disapproves of her choices, and Lydia has a great nose for trouble. He has lived above a bar for sixteen years. They have been hired to find some porcelain that has been stolen. Lydia is on the trail that includes highbrow art dealers in Chinese gangs. The novel starts as just a simple whodunit but becomes something a lot more evil and sinister. The author does a good job with using some of the tropes found in these sorts of books, and does so in a way that does not take away from the story. Some felt that this was a good first novel in a series, and it was long enough that it developed the characters as well as the plot. This novel is narrated by Bill Smith. There is a place that is supposed to be where people go to die. It is called the Bronx Home for the Aged. It is at the end of the avenue Grand Concourse. Only problem with the whole thing is that people are dying before they hit the right age. Bill has been hired by an old friend of his to look into a brutal killing on the Bronx Home grounds of a young security guard. Smith goes undercover, and goes into a sea of violence. There is another victim and knows that there is a method at work here. He has the help of Lydia on this case, and finds a web of corruption. He has to figure out who the next victim is supposed to be. Fans of the novel felt that this one was stronger than the first book in the series. Some like the way that the characters interact with one another. This is a fast moving and an intense story. Fans of the book found what Rozan is doing with these two characters to be interesting, the way that she shifts perspectives between Lydia and Bill in each of the novels. It feels like something that no other series has done before. This is a series that readers want more of and cannot wait to get their hands on more. Genna Jing who is elegant and has porcelain skin is certain that her new designs are going to make big bucks. That is why she has no problems paying the fifty thousand dollars that the person who stole her design book is wanting from her. Lydia, backed up by Bill, drops off the cash, and it is here that everything goes wrong. It starts as a simple case of high fashion extortion takes Bill and Lydia from Chinatown to Park Avenue. It leads from a murder taking place to more money. Now this person wants a million bucks so that a missing man will not be killed. Fans of the novel like the way that Lydia seems to be caught in two different worlds, and does not seem to be at home fully in either one. She is a strong person that does whatever she wants to do. Some feel that Lydia is the better of the two narrators. Some cannot wait to read more books about these two great characters. The way they are as people is interesting, but what is even better is their relationship and the way they interact with one another. The scenery of Chinatown was described vividly, and the way that the narrator describes the characters was well done. Jack Reacher is back! Family secrets come back to haunt Reacher when he decides to visit the town his father was born in. Because when he visits there he finds out no-one with the last name of Reacher has ever lived there. It leaves him wondering - did his father ever live there?
