Thank you for your input. Pen and paper, or computer for word programming Several sheets of card stock paper in white Several sheets of plain colored paper Exacto-knife Glue stick What You Do: Start by creating an accordion-folded trip diary. Use tape to attach the right edge of one page to the left edge of the other, as if you are making hinges, like this: Either way, your child can decide how she would like to organize her trip diary. Now lay your accordion stack on a protected surface, one that can stand up to a craft knife. Open the front flap and the back one, and fold them out separately, like this: This should be done before inserting the strip into the booklet. You can attach the strips together however you like. Stretch the book all the way out, and make sure your strip is long enough to go all the way to the back cover. Now, on each page, follow a steady format: On the bottom, she can write a description of what happened and the events that took place. On the colored strip that runs throughout the book, have her describe her perspective on it all: What are her thoughts about the trip? About what she has done so far? What did she think and feel at each stage? This activity requires your young writer to exercise important middle school literary skills. Many of us adults do this automatically, but for kids it takes practice. This project mixes it all together with great summer fun! Share Shares Before the age of Twitter and Facebook, the best way to keep track of your life was through a diary or journal. For most, a diary is a place of private introspection where one can transfer thoughts and feelings onto paper. In some cases, diaries are interesting documents that reveal a story of a certain time or place, like the diaries of Anne Frank and Samuel Pepys. It is no surprise that many diaries and journals of famous people have been published after their deaths. That is, Stalin, Churchill and the U. We have discovered the most terrible bomb in the history of the world. It may be the fire destruction prophesied in the Euphrates Valley era, after Noah and his fabulous ark. Anyway, we think we have found the way to cause a disintegration of the atom. An experiment in the New Mexico desert was startlingâ€”to put it mildly. Thirteen pounds of the explosive caused a crater six hundred feet deep and twelve hundred feet in diameter, knocked over a steel tower a half mile away, and knocked men down ten thousand yards away. Precisely 12 days before the first atomic bomb was dropped on Hiroshima, the president detailed the discussions he had about how the atomic bomb was to be used. Hiroshima was chosen due to its naval port and large military headquarters. In fact, it was revealed after the war that Kyoto was spared the bomb because the secretary of war, General Stimson, had honeymooned in Kyoto and was particularly fond of the city. Nagasaki was chosen instead and bombed three days after Hiroshima. As we know, the vast majority of casualties were civilians, particularly the elderly and children. Truman became racked with guilt in the days following the second atomic bomb explosion. We had fuel to make two cups of tea apiece and bare food for two days on the 20th. Every day we have been ready to start for our depot 11 miles away, but outside the door of the tent it remains a scene of whirling drift. I do not think we can hope for any better things now. We shall stick it out to the end , but we are getting weaker, of course, and the end cannot be far. If Scott and his four companions succeeded, they would have been the first humans to reach the isolated coordinates. On January 17, , two months after the expedition began, the team came within miles of the pole when they discovered the heartbreaking evidence of a Norwegian team who had arrived at the pole almost a month earlier. The team now faced a long and arduous journey back to civilization knowing that it would be the Norwegians, led by Roald Amundsen, who would go down in history for completing one of the greatest expeditions to date. As it so happened, Scott and his team would be remembered by history for the tragedy that would unfold on the return journey. On February 17, the team suffered their first loss, Edgar Evans, who had shown signs of exhaustion and severe frostbite. One month later on March 16, Lawrence Oates declared to the group he was unable to go on with such agonizing frostbite. Rather than making his comrades witness his death, Oates walked out of the tent into a severe blizzard, never to be seen again. A few days later, the three remaining men were prevented from making advances to the nearby supply depot by dreadful snowstorms and high winds. Stuck in their tent from March 19 to 29, Scott, Wilson, and Bowers slowly ran out of supplies and became increasingly frostbitten and exhausted. The bodies of the three men were found by a recovery party eight months later, huddled together in frozen sleeping bags. In Russia they slave for the State, here they slave for Expenses. People rush off to meaningless jobs day after day, you see them coughing in the subways at dawn. Shit on the Russians, shit on the Americans, shit on them all. Two years before his first published novel, The Town and the City, Kerouac wrote in his personal diary of his disdain for the modern culture of consumerism. Kerouac was 26 years old and living with his parents above a drug store in New York. It is no surprise that he mentions his mother in his diary; Kerouac was unashamedly devoted to her his whole life. Well, he never owned or lived on a farm, but he did drink plenty of wine in his later years, a habit that would eventually cause him severe health problems before his death at the age of How did I break the system? The diary is unashamedly superficial and often a mundane list of people Warhol had met or what he had bought from shops. It is, however, a very honest account of how Warhol saw himself and the world. In the above passage from , he is referring to a conversation with Bianca Jagger, ex-wife of Rolling Stones front man Mick Jagger. Complete immersion in myself , thinking of myself. I have nothing to say to anyoneâ€”never. Franz Kafka was known by few people during his lifetime. He was born in Prague but brought up to speak German, the language he used in his novels and diaries. He grew up in a family that showed very little love to each other, and his father was bullying and tyrannical. Written when Kafka was 31 years old, the above quote is representative of his social outlook. He often spent time alone and hated himself for it, believing he would never find love or be able to have a family. In addition his social anxiety and depression, he suffered from migraines, insomnia, constipation, boils, and tuberculosis , which would eventually kill him. These setbacks caused him to immerse himself in his writing. He accumulated a large body of work before his death, but his lack of confidence caused him to ask his friend to burn all his papers. His friend obviously betrayed this request and sent all his work to publishers. While this is a plus for lovers of literature, it is in some sense a tragedy that Kafka could not witness the adulation that his writing gained. Patton May 1, I feel like death, but I am not out yet. If they will let me fight, I will; but if not, I will resign so as to be able to talk, and then I will tell the truth, and possibly do my country more good. All the way home, 5 hours, I recited poetry to myself. His Will be done. He had led successful offensives in North Africa and Sicily At the time of this entry in his diary, D-Day, the most important Allied offensive of the war, was just six weeks away. Despite his skill as a general, he was prone to making political errors. This diary entry was written following a meeting with President Eisenhower in which General Patton was reprimanded for a comment he made to the press. Patton had told a journalist in London that he believed the United States and Britain were destined to rule the world. This had reportedly upset the Soviet allies, who had been fighting a much bloodier war against the Germans on the Eastern front. Patton acknowledged that the mistake was trivial, but the effects had been huge. This was not the first time Patton caused controversy. My favourite authors are Kipling, O. Henry and Steuart Edward White. My favourite flower is Lady Slipper and Tiger Lily. My favourite sports are Trout fishing, Hiking, shooting, football and boxing. My favourite studies are English, Zoology and Chemistry. I intend to travel and write. This is the first-ever diary entry of a nine-year-old Ernest Hemingway. Even as a child, we can see the traits of the direct and simplistic writing style that Hemingway became know for. Many nine-year-old boys have ideas about what they want to be when they grow up, but rarely do such visions come true. In the case of Hemingway, however, he did indeed write and travel extensively. He also became a great huntsman and fisherman, often pictured throughout his life with the animals he had slain and captured. The innocence of the diary entry is a far cry from the events that unfolded 52 years later. After a long history of alcoholism and mental illness, Hemingway killed himself at the age of He is having his meal. He jumps to his feet, there he is. Like an old friend. And those big blue eyes. He is glad to see me. I am in heaven. That man has got everything to be a king. One of the most infamous members of the Nazi Party, Josef Goebbels had a prominent position under Adolf Hitler, serving as Minister for Propaganda between and Years earlier in , he was appointed district leader of the Nazi Party in Berlin. The above quote from his diary documents his first meeting with Hitler after being appointed to the position. Goebbels wrote diaries throughout his time in the Nazi Party, and the entries from his early days give a remarkable insight into how Goebbels became enthralled by Hitler and Nazi ideology. His diaries are often written in a dramatic prose with short, sharp sentences describing his excitement at the progress of the Nazi Party in Germany. He was 28 at the time, but his adulation for Hitler resembles that of a young child toward his father. And I feel so incredibly guilty! For abandoning my true commrades who were the ones who are devoted who were into us a few years ago. The release of the book was a controversy, as many fans believe that the entries were private and not for public viewing. In the summer of , Nirvana had been together for four years, and Cobain had married Courtney Love just months earlier. He had also been in and out of rehab during that year in an attempt to kick a heroin habit he had developed while suffering from a stomach ulcer. Cobain felt he had let his true fans down and lost a part of his identity. As he stated in a MTV interview, he was torn between his love for making music and the consequences of being famous: When we came in she was sitting perched on a 3 cornered chair with knitting in her hands.

Good for hours of entertainment, this interactive travel and trip planner contains activities to get children involved in the planning, games and puzzles to keep them busy en-route and enough space to record up to three weeks of special memories.

In our more than 30 years each as educators, we found that this could not be more true than in the case of adolescent education. What a teenager learns by direct instruction from a teacher, parent, or book can be easily forgotten in a relatively short time. What they learn by example or experience can easily last a lifetime. It is on this precept that we strongly recommend that parents consider giving their children what many, including ourselves, consider to be the ultimate learning experience and summer vacation -- foreign travel. It is adventurous and broadening and it demands cooperativeness and fosters a benign dependence upon each other. In short, it provides a busy family, with multiple schedules during the year, the opportunity to bond and enjoy that precious "quality time" together. The examples and experience which they will absorb at these venues will most certainly have a positive effect on their senses, and in turn, their attitude, behavior and manners. Sounds great in theory, but does it really work? We decided to test it out on our first vacation abroad with our 16 year old son. But everything in this article would apply to a daughter as well. We had long dreamed of taking our son to Italy, not only to visit the land of half of his heritage, but also to bring him to the country in which he was conceived. We decided that 16 was the perfect age to take him; young enough to room with mom and dad, if necessary and old enough to remember the experience for the rest of his life. Next year we would be all wrapped up in college plans and the year after that, well, we felt that at 18, he would be a little too old to room with his parents. And who knows, he might not even want to be on vacation with us at that point. So it was settled -- a summer vacation for us in Italy. For you, it can be any destination of choice. The Planning Stage From the very beginning it is important that both parents and teen be involved in planning the trip and the first order of business is to decide whether you are going to take a chartered tour, go independently, or a combination of the two. If you have never been abroad, we recommend that you consider a charter. Otherwise do what we did, which was to rent a car, travel independently, but in some heavy-duty sightseeing cities, take a chartered tour. In cities where the tourist sites are closed to traffic except for buses and taxis, this is really your best bet. You can book these charters in advance or wait till you get there. The Red and Green Michelin guides are indispensable -- they are a must in our opinion. There are many language guides, but we found two excellent ones. It has these neat little stickers that you can put on objects around the house to help you learn vocabulary before you leave and comes with a CD-ROM. You should carry this book with you and keep it handy. Good travel diaries are hard to come by, but we found Complete Trip Diary by Marlor Press to be excellent. Everyone in the family should be encouraged to keep a diary of the trip. You may find some of these books in Kindle editions. The most important factor in the success of your trip is that everyone has a designated responsibility. Categories might include packing and luggage, itinerary and reservations, driving, navigating, sightseeing and photography still and video. Of course, responsibilities can be shared or rotated. In our case, mom and dad shared the driving, mom was in charge of packing the luggage; our son was in charge of organizing it in the car. Dad made the reservations, our son was the navigator and photographer, and we shared the decisions regarding itinerary, sightseeing, and places to eat. The vacation really begins with the planning stage, and it was a joy for us to come home from the book store, open up the road map of Italy and the guides, and begin to decide where we were going to go and how we were going to get there. Travelwise and Gary D Travel have two recommendations regarding the planning of the itinerary. One is to keep the travel distances reasonable -- 3 to 4 hours driving time between cities, max. Figure on 80 kilometers an hour, although you will probably do a little better than that, especially on the super highways. If you are traveling to Italy, as we were, the second recommendation is to fly to Geneva, Switzerland first and pick up your rental car in Geneva. There are several advantages to this strategy. You can fly Swiss International, which in our opinion is a superior airline -- punctual with excellent service. Geneva airport is user friendly, civilized and organized. You will get your luggage in record time and be on your way. And lastly, renting a car in Switzerland is less expensive with the advantage of having your car insurance covered for free if you use your American Express Gold Card. American Express will not cover insurance if you rent in Italy or six other countries. Renting a car is pretty straight forward. You can get a list of companies off the internet. But if you have the American Express Card, you may do better with Hertz, depending on your destination. We would strongly advise renting a car with air conditioning most come standard with AC and making sure your vehicle will have enough space for your luggage to be hidden from view and to accommodate your passengers comfortably. We were surprised to see the number of large cars and mini vans being used in Italy. After finding out that our car was going to be a Volkswagen Passat, a nearby Volkswagen dealer allowed us to bring our empty suitcases there to see how they would fit in the trunk. It was one of the smartest moves we made. When we arrived at the car rental in Geneva with full capacity luggage, we knew exactly how they were to be placed. No guesswork, no shifting around of heavy bags, no wasting time. Your US license is fine. Find out if your vehicle comes with GPS. With your itinerary set and your car reservations made, you need to turn your attention to hotel reservations. Get out your Red Michelin, Frommer and Karen Brown guides and go through each city on your itinerary, one by one, making a list of two or three hotels in each which strike your fancy. We made our reservations by using a combination of travel agent, personal email, and fax. Since we are travel agents, we did all the correspondence ourselves. Having a travel agency like Gary D Travel, who specializes in independent tours like this one is invaluable. They can check over everything including reservations. Gary D Travel sets up a personal relationship between you and the hotel they are then able to be really specific about what you want -- double room with extra bed, junior suite, room , balcony with view, newly renovated room, etc. They will get specific information regarding parking or non-smoking rooms, for instance. They will get any special rates available and can you send specific driving directions from each location. This will wave save money on room rates and time traveling. Contact Gary D Travel at and discuss your travel plans with them. They will go over every detail of your travel plans and secure reservations. Make Luxury Accommodations We recommended earlier taking your teenager to luxury or "charming" accommodations. Think back to some of your family dinners. Ever wonder as we have, where, on earth, your kids got their table manners from? For teenagers especially, teaching by example means needing more than the example of your parents. It means needing confirmation from a whole lot of other people. We noticed also, that he began watching more carefully how we ate, to ensure that his manners would be correct. It was an amazing metamorphosis which began at that first meal, and continued throughout our journey. Walking into a luxurious room had a similar effect. This was just not going to be a place to throw your stuff around. It too, commanded orderliness neatness cleanliness and respect. This is not to say that every accommodation must be a luxury or charming accommodation. Lesser accommodations will provide some financial relief although luxury and charm do not necessarily mean more expensive , as well as a means by which your teenager can compare and further appreciate the various life style levels. Maintaining Intimacy While Traveling with your Teen Just because we planned this trip with our teen in mind, does not mean we had to give up our intimacy as a couple. Obviously, when making accommodations, you have to keep this in mind. When we wrote our letter to the various hotels, we explained the purpose of our trip and asked, when possible if a separate or adjoining room could be supplied at the same rate as a triple occupancy. Some provided a suite with a separate bedroom. So we were able to enjoy our intimacy. Bond escorting a beautiful James Bond lady. It is interesting that after the first few times, our son initiated holding the chair and car door for his mom and he loved doing it. They love it and sets it up as a standard for the future. Teens Need Activity Teenagers need to be active, especially on vacation, and another plus that luxury accommodations provide is the benefit of extra activities. Most have beautiful swimming pools, which is a wonderful refresher for you and your teen after a day of sightseeing. Other activities might include gym and health spa, tennis, nearby golf, horseback riding, biking, hiking and parasailing in the mountain regions. And for those hotels which are on the water, most luxury hotels provide water activities, such as boat rentals, motor, sail, paddle, kayak as well as water skiing, snorkeling, wind-surfing and paraskiing. The concierge of a luxury hotel is an invaluable resource in your search for activities within or in the surrounding environs of the hotel. This person can gain you access to: Our son is a musician, as we are, and we tried to plan our trip around musical events that were going on. If your teen has a particular passion for an activity, you might want to get detailed information in advance and plan your itinerary around it. There are some good web sites to consult, which are easily searchable on the internet. Our son came home with several "first" experiences that he will never forget: Navigating A word of caution about navigation. We made this mistake early on in our trip and our son was rightfully upset to have his responsibility usurped.

Kids can record their own traveling adventures and make a treasured memory book with this trip diary. A great travel companion that enhances children's excitement about new places, this activity book offers plenty of writing and drawing space and supplies a keepsake section for ticket stubs, pictures, or other souvenirs.

Diyah Pera The relationship between a diary and a diarist is supposedly a private, sacred affair. Err, well no, actually. Because once those thoughts are out of your head and onto the page they can be seen by anybody. They can be found. To have it read. I am fairly unscrupulous. The best part about reading a diary and this applies to reading your own, old diaries is discovering what the writer of that diary chose to record. What was important to them on that day? Jason was messing about with a Bovril sandwich and somehow it ended up being shoved down my jumper I hasten to add that it was wrapped in cellophane. Everyone else saw "it was well funny. I was supposed to be revising for my GCSEs. Books based on diaries give a reader something really special. The feeling that someone is confiding in you; sharing things with you that they would never tell another living soul. There are many fantastic books for children and teenagers with a diary format. These are my top ten, in no particular order as these books are so diverse that it would be impossible to compare them to each other. At the same time, Mira joins a writing club at school where she is encouraged to write a diary. The timing is perfect. Things are changing and Mira is suddenly less keen to confide in her best friend. The diary becomes her keeper of secrets. This is a beautiful book, full of what it means to love and be loved. It also contains the sentence I most wish I had written. Since its first publication in it has been translated into 70 languages and sold over 30 million copies. When Anne first began her diary in , it was intended as a personal journal, for her eyes only. That changed in when she heard that the Dutch government was looking to collect letters and diaries after the war that would show the plight of the Dutch people. At this point, Anne revisited her old diaries, adding more detail and editing existing entries. She wanted to become a famous writer and imagined her diaries as a way of enabling that. This fact makes reading The Diary of a Young Girl a doubly powerful experience. Anne was a real teenager with real teenage concerns - the back of the book describes her as "an ordinary yet extraordinary teenage girl. Her chatty, friendly style of writing means that her diary entries possess a dry humour despite being poignant and devastatingly awful. She has two motivations " to practise her speed writing and to prepare herself for writing a novel. This story explores sibling relationships, loyalty and ultimately, the issue of unbalanced love. We meet highly likeable, touching characters who are prepared to love more than they are loved. There is a lot of passion flying around this book and it culminates in one of the most powerful endings I have ever read. That is, until the day that Mr Loomis walks into her valley, wearing a protective suit and dragging a wagon of provisions behind him. This was one of my favourite books as a teenager and the feeling of sinister menace that I remembered was just as strong when I recently re-read it. What if you were the last female on earth? Her diary is written over a period of three months and the ending is haunting. You only need to read the first few entries to understand why. In Gregg Heffley, we are given a character who lies, cheats and does whatever he deems necessary to get through his day. He suffers at the hands of his big brother, Rodrick and struggles to understand why his parents are so totally devoted to his little brother. The only person available for Gregg to assert any power over is his friend, Rowley " and even that goes wrong when he pushes Rowley too far over the worm-terrorising incident. I asked my son to explain why he thinks these books are international bestsellers. Angus, Thongs and Full Frontal Snogging by Louise Rennison This is not a book to read on public transport unless you are comfortable with laughing hysterically in a crowded train carriage. What I love about this book is the relationship that Georgia has with her friends. Dear Nobody by Berlie Doherty This book is an excellent read for older teenagers. The story of Chris and Helen and their little Nobody is heartbreaking and thought provoking. His memories are interspersed with letters written by Helen to their unborn baby " both of which create a diary feel throughout the book. The relationship between Helen and her mother is difficult but ultimately, the arrival of Nobody helps to heal generations of hurt. Are You There God? Written in the first person by year-old Margaret, we are taken on a journey of awkward moments, humiliating experiences and some serious self-doubt. I loved this book when I was younger and have recently passed it to my year-old daughter. Diary of a Killer Cat by Anne Fine This book is great for readers aged six-nine years although when I recently read it as a bedtime story to my six-year-old son, my year-old daughter snuck in to listen as she remembered enjoying it so much when she was younger. We are told the story from the point of view of Tuffy, the killer cat, who likes to talk straight and tell it like it is. Adrian is a teenage boy in desperate need of a hot bath and some care and attention, but his parents are too engrossed in their own issues plus, he is a highly annoying teenager with a large streak of arrogance. Everyone will know someone like Adrian â€” this book will remain a firm favourite for teenagers and adults alike, for many, many more years to come.
