Efforts have been made to increase growth in microfinance throughout the banking and corporate sector. These topics investigate the ways in which microfinance institutions have revolutionised the financial sector in the United Kingdom. An empirical study in the Eurozone. Both the retail and commercial banks have played a crucial role in reaching rural and semi-urban populations and provided much needed financial services to the mass population. These topics seek to understand how the banking sector has changed over time to accommodate the dynamic financial demands and further highlight the impacts of banking on various economic segments. Analysis and implications for local commercial banks. Theoretical and practical aspects. Changes and preferences occasioned by consumer demands. The case of developing countries. All major organisations across the world are trying to develop their footprints in these markets to get a share of the emerging pie and expand their scope of business. These topics evaluate the emerging market environment with respect to the financial investment opportunities it brings forth. Recent studies have confirmed the fact that increasing numbers of investors are opting to buy into the sector due to its huge return and comparatively less volatile nature of market. However, it is equally important to understand that alternative investment options typically do not correlate to the stock market, and thus are more complex than traditional investment vehicles. Return enhancers, risk diversifiers or both? Online banking has become a lifeline for those who cannot leave the house, live in rural areas where access to banks can be limited, or simply have no time to visit their nearest bank. Moreover, the evidence suggests that internet banking services have a significant impact on customer satisfaction, enhance demonetisation of the economy and contribute towards improved flow of funds within the economy. Are we ready for demonetization of the economy? Is there a relationship? Unlike the manufacturing industries, it does not cause detrimental effects such as pollution, however, the financial sector impacts almost everyone in the modern world in terms of financial stability. Given that banks are responsible for managing money of depositors, this has wide socio-economic implications for the society through the way they conduct their financial products and services. Therefore, corporate social responsibility becomes an integral part of corporate management strategy in banking industry. Although the key objective of a banking sector is to earn maximum profits for shareholders or owners, it is expected that they conduct their operations in a manner to fulfil their social obligations towards society. Analysis of Management Accounting Systems on Lean Implementation." I have examined the final electronic copy of this thesis for form and content and recommend that it be accepted in partial.

Below is an outline of the courses: In this course, we introduce three perspectives – positivistic, interpretive, and critical – and their underlying assumptions concerning the generation of scientific knowledge and its impact on our lives. Theories, Models and Technologies Cost Management is the backbone of financial and management accounting. Without a deep-rooted understanding of the financial situation of the company and the financial implications of future events, the company is likely to lose orientation and reduce the room for maneuvering. Within the management board, the cost manager is responsible for bringing the financial information into the decision process. Education of people who potentially heads for this kind of positions hence requires that these people are equipped with sufficient skills to understand costing in various business contexts and to communicate this understanding to all people within an organisation. The course aims at providing the students with knowledge about Danish and international cost management traditions, in order to create a thorough conceptual understanding of the fundamental techniques in cost accounting. Specifically, the students should come to master contemporary costing techniques and develop skills in communicating information obtainable from these techniques. Strategic and Organizational Concepts for Management Control The aim of this course is to give the students a solid foundation of knowledge of the different strategic schools and organisational concepts that form contemporary management control. The aim of the course is furthermore to make the students develop an understanding of how different strategic schools and organisational concepts can be used to frame an understanding among managers of the current situation of an organisation, and the possibilities that this situation provides for the organisation. Very often, the reality of the organisation is nuanced. Therefore, the understanding of a certain situation calls for a combination of different strategic schools and organisational concepts in order to be fully expressed. Focus on how and to what extent such combinations can be made is crucial for conducting management control properly. For this reason, the course ultimately aims at enabling the students to reach a nuanced understanding of the organisational situation and to produce valid arguments for the outcome of the analysis. Planning and Budgeting Budgeting plays a central role in planning and structuring organisations strategies. In all management accounting models, budgeting is integrated to some extent. Budgeting coordinates the organisations strategies and business units. It is used as a tool for structuring and creating guidelines for activities and to allocate resources and responsibilities. Furthermore, budgeting enables the organisation to follow up on planned activities and thereby illustrating the variances there may exist in the achieved performance. Budgeting is closely linked to performance measurements and it contributes to a specific focus on the organisations strategic goals. In recent years, there has been a rapid development in the use of information technology in the accounting departments of companies. Today, the majority of companies to some extent employ information technology for accounts and management accounting purposes. Some companies use simple accounting systems with just a few functionalities, whereas others, typically larger companies, have integrated their accounting systems into a larger system complex containing modules for e. Performance Management Performance management plays an increasingly important role in all type of organisations. It comprises various control tools such as result control, action control, interactive control, personnel and social control. Different management approaches can be adopted in using these tools to exercise management control. However, different control tools and the way they are applied are not equally feasible for solving management control problems in various types of organisational units, businesses and social contexts. The focus of the course is the various approaches and principles of performance management and how these will cohere with different types of organisations and organisational activity operating in various business environments. Emphasis will not only be on the appropriate choice of tools and approach for the specific context, but also on the business reality they create, i. International Financial Accounting I After attending the course the student should, at an intermediate level, understand the requirements for recognition in the published yearly report and be able to critically discuss the assumptions and concepts on which the figures are based. International Financial Accounting II The aim of this course is to develop an understanding of the importance of the quality of accounting information for decision making. The focus of the course will be on the reliability of the different accounting statements from a qualified user perspective. Students are supposed to identify a specific problem in management accounting in a field study. The goal of the course is to enable students to plan, investigate and compose a group-report on a management accounting problem in practice, and to reflect on their findings as a group in an expert conversation. You can also participate in internship programmes either in Denmark or abroad. You may freely choose the topic of the thesis and thereby get a chance to concentrate on and specialise in a specific field of interest. The thesis may be written in collaboration with another student or it may be the result of your individual effort. When the thesis has been submitted, it is defended before the academic advisor as well as an external examiner. All researchers employed are engaged in research projects covering a wide range of different subjects and focusing on knowledge and skills considered essential for professional business activities in the global marketplace. All faculty have both research and teaching responsibilities which means that our teaching is continually based on the latest research results. The broad scope of our research activities and educational programmes enable us to attract researchers, teachers, and students from all over the world, and this creates an international environment for research and learning in which academic views are exchanged, experiences are gathered and friendships are formed.
