The correct form depends upon whether you and your sibling are the SUBJECT of the verb that specifies an ACTION that you are both performing, or whether you (plural) are OBJECTS of an action indicated by the verb that describes the action performed.

My sister, Lily, woke on Monday to the letter. On the metro to school, I saw a message from Dad in the family group chat. I graduated from Trinity Grammar School in Sydney last year. The school where I spent the last 12 years of my life, chose to openly advocate for homophobia. Lily graduated from a Uniting Church school in , a school with a very different approach to LGBT students and teachers. We immediately Skyped each other. We may have graduated school, but our anger has lingered. Anglican school students ask principals to give up right to sack gay teachers Read more Lily and I have talked extensively about our high school experiences as gay students. We both acknowledge how privileged we are to have attended private schools; but also, the sheer luck of being raised in a loving, gay-friendly family. For Lily, this safe space extended to her school. It makes us feel alone. Being queer was just one small aspect of my school experience; for you, it was central. On the rare occasion that I reported a student, the school acted directly. I was grateful for that. Yet not once did the school attempt to address the underlying issue. As I grew older, the bullying stopped. Not thanks to the school, but because the students had, for the most part, matured and rejected much of the homophobia the school administration implicitly subscribed to. It still shocks me that my year-old mates were better educated on these issues than our supposed educators. By year 12, I had a group of friends who were out and proud and a few straight friends who were willing to confront homophobic behaviour. We wanted to change the culture, and just being ourselves was our rebellion. But giving younger students a role model, trying to make them feel accepted, should not have been our job. My face and Atar, and those of other gay students in my year, are plastered across the school website to promote the school. The school uses art made by my boyfriend in its publications. It has asked a gay friend of mine to help coach debating. Leaders of the school music groups and sports teams are gay. We help make the school what it is. At 14, I sat in a science lab listening to a teacher explain that bisexuality was as evil as rape. A few years later a class featured a teacher who spoke at length on the "obvious" correlation between homosexuality and paedophilia. When there is no one out in your year, you know you will be okay "because a number of your teachers are queer. A future where you can have a loving partner and a fulfilling job. It arms you for life. I had an incredible teacher who both inspired and challenged me. At graduation I learned that this teacher is gay. I thought this privacy was selfish. I now realise how naive my view was. Sydney Anglican principal rejects right to sack gay teachers Read more Lily went to a school where she was given the space to engage with queer issues. I remember being so proud "and jealous "on the day she came home and told me about the speech she gave to her school on Wear It Purple Day. I gave a speech to a sea of girls with purple ribbons in their hair, and purple shoelaces on their feet. Each year, it was a kind of catharsis for me. To speak to my peers, to have them hear that message, it was important. How can I justify loving a place that wants to protect its right to reject me and people like me? The Anglican diocese claims schools do not expel students or sack teachers for their sexuality. It highlights that we are still not welcome, nor safe because of who we are. Lily is a law and creative writing student at the University of Technology Sydney Topics.
