Veggie Loaded Taco Meat Hello friends!! Staying warm, I hope? Milton is happy, he hates when I dress him up and make him go fluff around in it. I know, who am I? Like avocado, cheese, and making a decent dressing. So this week, I went with taco salads. I know, those are so unhealthy, right? But, like I said, the goal is just straight up increasing vegetable intake, so taco salad totally counts. And, I bulked up the veggie situation even more by adding cauliflower and bell peppers to the meat. Cut the cauliflower into bite sized pieces and chop the peppers. Heat a large pan over medium heat and add some olive oil or your cooking oil of choice. Add the peppers, cauliflower, salt and pepper. Cook for about 10 minutes, stirring occasionally. You want for the veggies to get tender and get some color. When the veggies reach your desired doneness, add the ground turkey, tomato sauce, taco seasoning, and garlic. Cook until the meat is brown and completely cooked through. It took about 7 minutes, I think. This meat is super versatile. You could also just do regular tacos. The ground turkey is lower in fat than the more traditional beef taco meat, and the veggies give it an added boost of nutrition. I bet even the pickiest of children will eat this if you smother it in cheese. Question of the Day: How do you increase your veggie intake without feeling like a rabbit?
