

Chapter 1 : Moscow - St. Petersburg

The Moscow - Saint Petersburg Railway is the second oldest railway in Russia after a short line connecting Saint Petersburg and Tsarskoe Selo.

To serve this demand, trains depart from Moscow to Saint Petersburg frequently: You can always choose convenient departure time as there are trains departing every hours from the early morning till late night. The distance of km between two capitals of Russia can be covered in quite short time from 10 to 4 hours by train. Sleeper trains usually cover this distance during the night, on average it is 8 hours. High-speed seating trains run from morning till evening and get from Moscow to Saint Petersburg in about 4 hours. This travel option is considered to have a great advantage over a flight as both train stations are located in the city centre and near metro which makes your further journey to the hotel or a tour much faster and easier. Alternatively, overnight trains also offer a great way of travel, when you take your train, sleep all night and arrive fresh and rested in the morning. The route Moscow - Saint Petersburg is mostly served by branded trains, which provide a certain level of comfort and range of services, bio toilets and air conditioning. In some cars the meals are included in the ticket price, passengers of other cars can order meals to their compartments or visit a restaurant car. Express day trains have seating cars with economy and business cars. Night trains offer four types of sleeper cars: More detailed information about types of sleeper cars on Russian trains is in our article. Departure and arrival train stations Trains depart from Kurskiy train station and Leningradskiy train station in Moscow. There are more departures from the latter as this is the main train station of Moscow. Leningradskiy train station has cozy lounges and waiting rooms. If you are bringing too many bags you can use the services of porters to carry your luggage. If you need to leave your luggage at the station upon arrival, there is a storeroom at the station. For the last-minute shopping before the train departure you can visit Moskovskiy Department Store – one of the oldest shopping malls of Moscow which has a wide range of clothing, gadgets, perfumery and souvenirs. Most trains including Sapsan arrive to Moskovskiy train station. Trains that pass Saint Petersburg as a transit city usually stop at Ladozhskiy train station which is quite remote from the city center but still has metro and ground transport connection with the central part. We will be glad to offer you a service of transfer as you arrive to Saint Petersburg; our driver will meet you at the carriage from any train station and drop you off at your hotel for a moderate fee. There are many things to see in Saint Petersburg so you may also want to visit one of our private guided tours.

Moscow to St. Petersburg Trains. Russia's 'two capitals' are well connected by an efficiently run and rather quick railway network. There is a great variety of Moscow to St. Petersburg trains to meet everyone's needs.

Petersburg to Moscow, an experience I was very pleasantly surprised by. I know just about everywhere in the world is better than the US when it comes to train travel, but the service and punctuality really impressed me. With that in mind, here are my thoughts: Why did we take the train from St. Petersburg to Moscow rather than flying? You can fly from St. In both Moscow and St. Petersburg the airports are a good distance from the city, while the train stations are closer to the city center. How much are train tickets between St. The site was easy to use, and we decided on the 9AM train, arriving at It was my understanding that the first class seats recline more, but for a daytime train ride that seemed unnecessary. How early should you arrive for the Sapsan train? We got to the train station at 8AM. We sat down in the one coffee shop that looked decent, and at 8: Interestingly as the train arrived a loud song played throughout the train station at a very high volume, which I believe was the same one as in this video: Alrighty then! There is legit security for those taking the Sapsan train, much like when going through an airport. Your bags are screened, and you go through a metal detector. Sapsan train business class experience The business class cabin on the Sapsan is in a configuration, with leather seats. The seats were comfortable, though not overly spacious. They had plenty of legroom, though seat width was limited. There was a footrest at each seat. The train departed and arrived exactly on time, to the minute. Shortly after departure tablecloths were distributed, and then moist towels and drinks were served. After that the crew came through with the breakfast service. I chose the former, which was served with a piece of bread and yogurt. The breakfast was surprisingly decent. After breakfast the crew came through with coffee, tea, and croissants. In a way the service was a nice distraction, and made the time pass a bit more quickly. There were a couple of brief moments where there were better views, but that was the exception rather than the norm. The train also has complimentary wifi, though they text you a wifi access code in order to be able to connect to the wifi. The wifi was probably a bit slower than inflight wifi on most airlines, though it was decently usable, and better than tethering off my phone. There was a power outlet between seats, which meant I could keep my electronics charged throughout the ride. If traveling alone it seems nice to be able to sit alone. Sapsan business class Business class is in a configuration, with complimentary food and generally attentive service. Sapsan economy class Economy is also in a configuration, though the seats are cloth rather than leather. Sapsan high speed train bottom line We had a great experience on the Sapsan. The ride was exactly on time, the service friendly and attentive, and the seats comfortable. Ultimately the main difference between economy and business is that you get free food in business, and the seats are leather and perhaps a little more spacious. I highly recommend taking the Sapsan between Moscow and St.

Chapter 3 : Review: Sapsan Train Business Class From St. Petersburg To Moscow - One Mile at a Time

St. Petersburg, cultural capital. Saint Petersburg is the most cultural and European city in Russia. It was founded by Peter the Great, who spent lots of years traveling in Europe in order to create the city as much developed as it was abroad.

June 4, by Bino 1 Comment https: Both cities have a wealth of attractions, including palaces, churches as well as exciting culinary and nightlife scenes. But what if you find yourself able to visit only one – should you visit Moscow or St. Alternatively, if you have time for both, in which city do you spend more days? During a recent trip to Russia, I had a similar problem deciding. My trip allowed me to visit both cities but I was not sure in the beginning whether I should stay for more days in Moscow or St. The city is highly cosmopolitan. You will find a large number of people from all around Russia here and even people from the former Soviet republics. There are plenty of highways circling the city to reach areas outside the central core. Moscow is definitely one of the great cities of the world. There are plenty of districts from which to explore. Personally, I love the area surrounding the Patriarchy Ponds filled with plenty of charming shops and hip restaurants. The towns around the golden ring, i. Suzdal, Vladimir, Sergiev Posad, etc are either a car or train ride away and can easily keep you preoccupied for a couple of days. The city is not as touristy as St. The most prominent is Flacon, a short walk from Dmitrovskaya station. The Russian capital is frequently ranked as one of the most expensive cities in the world. All it takes is a visit to the iconic GUM shopping mall to see the astronomical prices. If you are visiting Moscow independently, you might find getting by via public transport a bit confusing. If any consolation, some of the stations are among the most beautiful subway stations in the world. While both Moscow and St. There are no shortage of sights in Moscow but many of them are scattered all around the city. Interesting places in the outskirts include: But these are at different directions from the center. Where I stayed in Moscow: I found the InterContinental Tverskaya Moscow to be conveniently located. Service overall is fantastic and there are good deals to be had during weekends. Petersburg view of st. Petersburg probably ranks among the most visually appealing cities in Europe. Almost any building in the central core for example can be considered as a tourist attraction. The city is one of the great touristic cities in Europe – hosting plenty of daytrippers from cruises around the Baltics or Scandinavia. Peter the Great spared no expense in hiring the best architects from Western Europe when he established the city. Petersburg is relatively cheaper than Moscow. While I was there, I saw many restaurants and shops displaying signs in Chinese. Petersburg can get quite touristy and you could find the crowds a bit maddening and you might even need to queue for a long time to enter. Where I stayed in St. I was pleasantly surprised by the Crowne Plaza Ligovsky. Some of the rooms are styled like a palace with engravings on the walls. Fresh juices were served during breakfast – something relatively unheard of for a 4 star hotel. Best of all, it is located just across Galeria, one of the biggest shopping malls in St. Where to go if you could choose only one city? Both Moscow and St. However, if your stay in Russia is very short and barring any other limitations, I would suggest going to St. My reasons are as follows: Petersburg is quicker to navigate. You can finish most of the main attractions within a couple of days by focusing on the city center and perhaps visiting the area north of the river. In contrast, Moscow is quite spread out. The city is so much more than the Kremlin and Red Square that it will take you more days to really see the city. It would be better to visit Moscow next time when you have more days to spare. If you have enough time for both cities, where should you allocate more days? On the other hand, if you have more time to visit both cities and are deciding where to allocate more days – I would suggest allocating more days for Moscow. Other than the extra time required to see the city outskirts, you could also use the extra days to arrange excursions to the cities in the Golden Ring. Also check out my suggested one week itinerary for Russia. This will help greatly when you navigate metro stations and read shop signs. Petersburg will save you lots when it comes to transport cost and is far more convenient than buying tickets on the spot. For places that are not covered by the metro, you can consider ride-sharing apps like UBER. You May Also Like.

The hotels we use in both Moscow and St. Petersburg are in this style and are just a short journey by metro from the city centres. In Moscow our hotel is by Partizanskaya metro station and is approximately 15 minutes from the Red Square.

The route of the projected road passes through four regions of Russia, the climate of which varies from moderately continental Moscow Oblast , Tver Oblast to transitional from continental to maritime Novgorod Oblast , Leningrad Oblast , which affects the requirements for the design of the route. The project received the necessary permits and approvals, including a positive response from the state environment review at the stage of investment basis and the FAU "Glavgos Expertiza of Russia" at the stage of approval of the engineering project. Public hearings were held in May Map of the M11 in the Moscow and Tver Oblasts , A centralized automated traffic management system would be installed at the head section of the Moscow–St. Separation barriers and lighting will be installed for the entire main sections of the motorway. In order to reduce noise pollution , the project would also implement the construction of noise barriers along the route. The tariff will vary depending on the vehicle category, time of day, frequency of use of the route, etc. Petersburg International Economic Forum. The load of the federal highway M10 now exceeds at least three times of the maximum. With a standard throughput of 40, cars per day to date, the traffic intensity reaches ,â€”, cars. The accident rate on the M10 track exceeds almost three times the national average. The level of air pollution in the territory around the highway exceeds in 3 to 5 times than the norm. Planning[edit] The decision to build the highway was taken by the Ministry of Transport , and the initiative came from Russian President Vladimir Putin. In February , a concessionaire was chosen from a list of private companies for the construction of the first section. According to his decision, additional public and expert discussions are to be carried out. Speaking in Saint Petersburg , Deputy Prime Minister Sergei Ivanov stated that new saplings would be planted on a territory of hectares 1, acres to compensate for the deforesting of about hectares acres of the Khimki Forest. It was until June that the reconstruction of the junction would be completed. The contract will be expired for a period of 30 years. The competition for the concession agreement would occur from to in the autumn season while the planned construction period is â€” Opening of traffic on the first section of the M11 motorway on 23 December This section would connect to the Vyshny Volochyok bypass section. Starting at Vyshny Volochyok, the M11 would go through Novgorod Oblast and pass by cities such as Bologoye , Okulovka , and Borovichi and finally end at the town of Myasnoy Bor, which is less than 35 km away from Veliky Novgorod. The outlet stated that only a quarter of the route from St. Petersburg to Myasnoy Bor near Veliky Novgorod would be completed. One reason why is that many of the Russian contractors are on the verge of bankruptcy and therefore abandoned construction. Another reason is that the state had struggled to pay its workers, leading to protests and strikes from different contractors. Work of the highway almost stopped, threatening to delay the completion of the motorway before the FIFA World Cup even further. Petersburg and did not pay money to some contractors. Therefore, it became a problematic partner during construction resulting in arbitration proceedings occurring under way. And the construction of the route bypassing Tver is going to start after
