Mountcollins, Co. Limerick. Mountcollins is a village in the extreme south west of County Limerick, Ireland, barely metres from the border with County Kerry and just a mile from County Cork.

Limerick Leader current, Saturday, July 14, ; Page: Hearty congratulations are extended to Miss Anastasia Harnett on her securing the degree of B. She is daughter of Mr. Another brilliant student is Mr. Eddie E Sheehan, of Brosna, Co. Kerry, who last year obtained his B. There goes the champion of the British market. Now that the principal portion of the village street is steamrolled and tarred it is a pity that the hedges bordering certain parts of the street are not trimmed. It is very ugly and shows utter carelessness and a lack of civic pride to allow these hedges to grow wild. They destroy the beauty of the village and are injurious to the roadway as well. It is to be hoped that when the rush of the harvest season is over owners will trim these hedges and so help in a small way at least to add to the beauty of the village. The local-elections are now over and the people have made their choice in the elected representatives to the Councils. There is no good in trying to apportion blame for the defeat of certain candidates. The elections turned out to be a straight fight between the two big parties in a political issue, with Labour suffering a big defeat in the Newcastle West area. The defeat of Mr. He was formerly a member of the old Board of Guardians and District Council. The good he has done will be long remembered and his defeat can be attributed to the fact that the elections were fought on the political issue as between Fianna Fail and Fine Gael. The election of Mr. C, Tournafulla, at the head of the poll has given entire satisfaction in this area. Space will not allow me to deal with the activities of Mr. Harnett on behalf of Ireland from onwards down to the present day. He is a brother-in-law to Mr. His latest book, dealing with gipsy life, and the scenes laid in Kerry, received a very favourable review recently. It is a book that should be in every home. INJURED Stanley Woods, the famous Irish motor cyclist, is suffering from a peculiar injury to his left hand, which will prevent him racing for the remainder of the present season. The bone of his forearm is dislocatedâ€”an injury which in most cases is fatal. The injury happened in Holland a fortnight ago, but he is being treated by surgeons in Dublin. This increase is officially accounted for by the natural increaseâ€”excess of births over deathsâ€”and the excess of immigration over emigration.

Died on October 4th The church in Mountcollins is close to the Kerry border and indeed some of the churchgoers here are from Co. The church bell was installed in in memory of Mrs Johanna Bell, who was a benefactress of the parish. In the porch of the church there is a water font that was erected by Mountcollins D. Various donors presented the stained glass windows to the church. There is an altar to St Theresa of Liseux on the left of the nave. To the left of the main altar there is a statue to Mary and to the right of the main altar, there is a statue to the Sacred Heart. Buried in the grounds of the church is: Although no trace of the church remains, the site can be entered by gate from a point just beyond the parochial house. This church had a thatched roof and was built with ash and stones. This church was part of the old village of Tournafulla. However, following the Great Flood of by the river Allaughan, the village moved to a higher location. The walk to the old church site is over marshy ground along a path that once served as a mass path. There were two mass paths, one for each end of the parish. These paths can still be walked in parts. The old church was called "the Chapel of the Mountain of the Curse". Westropp referred to this church as Monte Maledictions. On the site of the church, there is a plain headstone set on stone. This headstone marks the original burial place of Fr Shanahan. In , his body was exhumed and reburied in the new cemetery behind Tournafulla church. The people of the parish erected a headstone to his memory over the new gravesite. Each of the two graveyards is situated beside one of the two churches. The present day cemetery in Tournafulla opened in Prior to , most of the people in Tournafulla were buried in one of three places: Templeglantine, Monagea or Abbeyfeale. The graveyard in Mountcollins is older than its compatriot in Tournafulla. The oldest headstone that we came across was in memory of Eaneas D. Lane from Knockulcare, who died in June There is also an old graveyard in the parish. This graveyard is situated below the site of the old church in Tournafulla. However, there are no headstones to mark the graves here, only stone markers. The field in which this graveyard is located is called the "White Field" and is owned by Dinny Brown. In the past, rounds were made at the well. Nowadays the well is covered over by briars and there are no devotions made there. Small religious objects were left here as offerings, rags were left on the bushes and little crosses of rushes or wild iris blades were dropped into the well. A little girl reputedly took water from the well in ignorance and tried to boil it. However, the water would not boil and a little fish was seen in it, so the water and the fish were returned to the well. There is a second grotto in the parish, in Mountcollins. The grotto is dedicated to Mary. Her community had a dairy farm at Seconglass near Mountcollins. One evening, while Ita was on her way to the farm, the people of Tournafulla set their dogs on her donkeys. The donkeys ran away and when St Ita caught up with them, one of the donkeys was lame. She went on to the river Iskule, which is now known as the Skule. She removed the thorn and turned the point downwards. She planted it near her convent and it is supposed to have grown into a thorn bush on which all the thorns grow down. It is alleged that her footprint, as well as that of the donkey, was left on some of the rocks located at the river. It is said that if one is sick, placing ones feet in the imprints in the rocks will heal the particular ailment. Most of his well-known poems were of a religious nature and he wrote these poems while he was living in Dungarvan, Co. Tadhg also lived in East Cork for a while. From about on, his life changed and he became a pilgrim and looked for penance for his sins. It was at this time that Tadhg began to write his religious poems. He died in Waterford Cathedral in and is buried in Ballylaneen cemetery. After his death, the first edition of his poetry was published in Limerick.
