Frabil Net bags Location: With my son on the water Hi Guys No doubt the Frabil nets are great products, it is time to upgrade as my current Beckman is almost done so I am going with a Frabil. The question is which one so I have 2 questions I need some feedback on. It seems the term Power Catch is used kind of geneically and there are actually 3 models I am interested in that have the power catch. There is also a cost difference with between the two nets and the is obviously higher although this is not a show stopper if it is the correct net. The is the net that seems to be in most of the stores I have looked at? My second question is Frabil offers the in a version with a 72 inch handle for a small additional cost. I like a longer net handle and actually have an extension on my current Beckman. So my second question is anyone using the model which has what I think is a lighter bag and a longer handle. I know there are lots of threads on this and I have read them but none of them are as specific as I what I am looking for. Have a good day guys and thanks in advance. Frabil Net bags Posts: Money, PA I personally do not like these huge hooped nets myself They are not only big and bulky to stow, but also big and bulky to handle when the time comes to net a monster. This is my personal preference and you will get different opinions on this matter, so like many other aspects of muskie fishing; its what is most comfy for you. I personally use a Frabil Power Catch mid size which I use for muskie and salmon whenever I salmon fish as well. The nicest thing is that it stows, conveniently, up against the inside wall of my boat perfectly, out of the way, but within reach at all times. Remember, mine is just 1 perspective Good Luck in your search. Instead, I went with a slightly smaller Drifter XL bag at 37x35, which looks like a heavier bag but slightly smaller hoop size. It is not as flexible as the thin coated mesh bags. Fish tend not to roll and get caught up in it as bad. Makes for easier hook removal and faster releases. The net is nice and keeps fish from getting too wound up. Madison, WI Have you checked out the new drifter nets? I got a chance to use one up in canada, and really liked it. They are very similar to the frabil models you describe but I thought they were slightly lighter so most likely easier to handle alone. Also I know they come in different colors so you can maybe find one to match your boat. Also I see they are introducing a new predator series net witch look a lot like the old Beckman nets so if you were happy with your Beckman you may want to check those out. It has the heavily coated rubber mesh, and is very tangle free. The price on the frabil website seems very, very high, though I bought mine probably 8 years ago. I think the 2" is the thinner stuff.

Anglers come for miles around to fish our trophy waters. Lake of the Woods is a world class muskie fishery with over 65, miles of shoreline and 14, islands. Check out a list of NW Angle Resorts who can set you up with some of the best guides in the business. For those that just love the sport, here are some tips on safely practicing catch and release: Careful handling makes catch-and-release work. A big muskie is an old muskie. Females require 14 to 17 years to reach 30 pounds. Northern pike grow even more slowly. Once taken out of the water and hung on a wall or carved into fillets, a trophy is not soon replaced by another fish of its size. So, the key to creating trophy northern pike and muskie fishing is catch-and-release angling. Unfortunately, some fish are mortally injured by improper handling and cannot be successfully released. All northern pike and muskie are difficult to handle because of their slippery hides, lack of good handles and sharp teeth. Big fish are particularly troublesome because of their great size and power. The first step to successfully releasing fish is to use artificials rather than live bait. The second step is to keep the fish in the water if at all possible. Caught on artificials and handled carefully, nearly all fish can be returned with no permanent injury. Here are some effective methods, courtesy of Muskie Canada, for handling large northern pike and muskie: Grip the fish over the back, right behind the gills never by the eye sockets! With the other hand, use a pliers to remove the hooks, while leaving all but the head of the fish in the water. Sometimes hooks can be removed with the pliers only; the fish need never be touched. Hooks can be removed from some fish even as they remain in the net in the water. To better restrain large fish, stretch a piece of cloth or plastic over the fish and pin it down as if it were in a straight jacket. A stretcher is made of net or porous cloth about 2 to 3 feet wide stretched between two poles. As you draw the fish into the cradle and lift, the fold of the mesh supports and restrains the fish. This method requires two anglers. The fish is thus securely held, though the head must be further restrained before the hooks are removed. If you must lift a big fish from the water, support as much of its body as possible to avoid injuring its internal organs. Never grip a fish by the eye sockets if you intend to release it. By doing so you abrade its eyes, injure the surrounding tissue and may cause blindness. Muskie anglers are a very passionate breed, often fishing from dawn to dusk. They also have the deepest respect for muskies and overall do an excellent job of making sure these ultimate predators return to the water unharmed. Best of luck to all muskie anglers not only this weekend but this year. The muskies have been active this spring, are in good numbers and should be active.
