Cats[edit] There are many cats which appear in the stories, usually by name, often taking an active part in the proceedings. Unlike ordinary housecats, these cats often display paranormal abilities, as well as considerable intelligence. As a young soldier, Jela found the tree on a desert planet on which his ship had crashed. Though barely a stunted seedling and the last member of a dying race, the tree was by itself able to repel invasion of the planet by the enemy Sheriekas. As an act of trust, the tree gave its only seed pod to feed the starving Jela. The tree proved to be intelligent, and able to communicate via mental images. It also had the ability to manipulate the chemistry of its seed pods to create useful pharmaceutical compounds. Both these powers proved useful as Jela and Cantra searched for information necessary for mankind to escape its collapsing universe. Clan Korval holds itself the guardian of this promise in perpetuity, and every trading vessel of Korval carries a seed of the tree somewhere on board, to ensure the survival of its race. Part of this concept is roughly analogous to personal honor or good manners: Different levels of formality, and actions, will be appropriate in each case. Ships[edit] Human ships are able to travel quickly between planets by "jumping"; different technologies exist but are all fairly quick; journey durations are comparable to swift sea-travel here on Earth. Only the Clutch Turtles use a different method, with predictably idiosyncratic side-effects of which few details are available. Propulsion and artificial gravity is provided by Struven Surface Units which Theo describes as having a "sense of presence. There are of course many specialty craft for station maintenance, and other utilitarian functions. In this era of relative peace, there is little mention of purpose-built military ships, except for the battleships of the warlike Yxtrang though mercenary companies have troop ships and various support ships. Planetary governments may have small fleets of fighter craft, for defensive purposes, that operate both in air and near space. It is not uncommon, however, for merchant ships to carry weaponry to defend themselves from pirates and brigands. Pilots are addressed as "Pilot" as an honorific title. Pilots must have superior reflexes, coordination, and spatial orientation. A pilot needs to be able to defend herself in the low port or away from civilization, thus trains in self-defense and personal weaponry. The Pilot is responsible for the ship and passengers; the Co-pilot is responsible for the pilot and ship. Bechimo adds, "the ship is responsible for pilot and crew. The co-pilot, or acting co-pilot, "sits Second. Many, if not most, pilots belong to the Pilots Guild. Each Guild Hall has a Guild Master. The Guild certified Pilot Classes: This heavy duty garment, with many internal pockets, is both a sign of rank and protection against weather and misadventure. Only Jump Pilots wear a Pilots Jacket, this is not by law, but tends to be enforced through "social pressure" which may become physical. Master Pilots may train and certify pilots. A pilot in training will be granted "provisional" status in grade as the student advances. Fan fiction[edit] Lee and Miller strongly oppose any fan fiction written in the Liaden universe. Steve and I do not sanction fanfic written in our universes; any such work that exists, exists without our permission, and certainly without our support.

She is the co-author with Steve Miller of the Liaden universe novels and stories, as well as other works, and individually the author of two mystery novels. Steve Miller is an American science fiction writer from Winslow, Maine, best known for his works set in the Liaden universe, written in collaboration with his wife Sharon Lee. History of the series The series is notable because it almost failed to take flight, and probably would only be three books long except for the Internet. The authors had written the first three books Agent of Change, Conflict of Honors, Carpe Diem but were told that sales were not sufficient to justify continuing. Unbeknownst to them the books had caused such a stir on the Usenet group rec. Upon gaining Internet access, the authors were surprised to find so many people looking for the next book, and even more surprised that its title was already decided on: They published some chapbooks to stave off the hungry fans and started writing: There are also a number of short stories, some filling in gaps between novels, some providing background on minor and not so minor characters. The series is ongoing as of , with seventeen novels and numerous chapbooks and short stories, and a number of new novels contracted to be written. All the novels are available as ebooks. Overview The series is set at some unspecified time in the future. Terran, Liaden and Yxtrang. There are also numerous isolated colony planets that have backslid technologically and are held as protectorates until their civilizations regain enough advances to cope with extraplanetary contact. Though their headquarters on Liad were destroyed at the end of the original sequence, vestiges of the Department continue to plague Clan Korval in subsequent novels. It features Jethri Gobelyn, a young Terran trader who is adopted by a Liaden Master Trader to the consternation of virtually everyone. A sequel to this popular book, Trade Secret, was published in and follows Jethri as he starts his career as a trader. The ninth novel, Crystal Soldier, published in February , takes place even earlier still: The sequel, Crystal Dragon, was published in and takes the story up through the founding of Liad and of Clan Korval. Four stars for The Beggar King, set on Liad. This book coincides with the events in Mouse and Dragon. Her son Daav is visiting home, on leave from the Scouts. Chi asks him to find out what is happening to the pilots, disappearing after they leave the Low Port casinos. I expect they are being drugged and programmed to work for the Dept of the Interior as Agents of Change, but this is never stated. Daav meets the new Juntavas Boss while sleuth Two short stories. Daav meets the new Juntavas Boss while sleuthing around the Low Port. I liked the dialogue when they first met. Together, Daav and Clarence try to catch a pilot-napper Lively, warm-hearted, and mischievous, she appears to be the opposite of Petrella, her twin, who forbade Er Thom from marrying Anne Davis, in Local Custom. But Petrella was dying, in such pain This "missing pilots" plot thread continues with Daav and his life mate, Alleanne, in Mouse and Dragon. And continues for Val Con in Agent of Change It takes place at a vineyard. The synopsis says it takes place before Korval piloted humanity to Liad see Crystal Dragon The Great Migration Duology, 2 , "in the time and space before Clan Korval, when the universe was degenerating into chaos". Note, there is no hint of world-ending chaos in this story. Given the setting, I had hoped it would reveal something about Uncle, who is, after all, a "scientist" -- but no. And the "slave" is not a cloned batcher. A human chemist is falsely accused. In punishment, ceramic beads are sewn under her skin, like a necklace. The beads control her, and can be used to torture. Three magical, monstrous, and sexy human-plant hybrids play a major role. Kind of gruesome, but funny, like a B movie or a Greek myth. It does, perhaps, shed some light on the unique abilities and the passionate vine-love manifested by the master vintner at Irikwae, in Balance of Trade? She is best recognized as a co-author with Steve Miller of Liaden Universe novels and stories, totaling eighteen novels and a wide range of short stories. Sharon Lee is also the co-writer other works, and independently the writer of two anonymous novels. Lee graduated from the Parkville Senior High School PSHS in the year , and attended the University of Maryland during the late s while working as an administrative assistant to the dean of the school of social work and community planning at UMAB professional schools in downtown Baltimore. In her entire life, Sharon Lee has been working as a secretary in different places, as well as a call-in talk hostess, publicity copywriter, night-side news copy editor, photographer, freelance reporter, deliverer of tractor trailers and book reviewer. Beginning in , Lee served three years as an executive director of science fiction and fantasy writers of America, and was afterwards elected as the vice president, then as the president of that institute. Moreover, she has written two Maine base anonymous novels- Gunshy and Barnburner, in addition to her assistance to Liaden universe. Sharon Lee was married to Steve Miller in In the year , the two couples relocated to Central Maine, and currently live in Winslow. Together, Sharon and Steve Miller have written four extra novels of fantasy and science fiction, and also edited an anthology as well. The two are jointly the receivers of Edward E. Smith memorial award for imaginative fiction. It is also known as the Skylark Award and was presented by the New England science fiction Association. She has been married to her husband for almost half her lifetime and is a friend to cats. Moreover, Lee is a member of NCA -National Carousel Association, and also an investment scheme of an incredible number of stuffed animals. Even though she was born in the year of the dragon, Lee is a shy person. She resides in Maine since she likes it there. She likes Maine so much that she has five novels written all by herself set in Maine. With the abovementioned husband, Steve Miller, Lee has written about seventeen novels of fantasy and Science fiction-many of them set in Liaden Universe -and several short stories. Sharon has regularly been less adventurous, a reporter, an advertising copywriter, book reviewer, photographer, and a secretary. Before he settled down to the quiet and stable life of fantasy and science fiction writer, Steve was a rock-band reviewer, a traveling poet, reporter, and an editor of community newspapers. Liaden law obliges him to offer kids to the tribe, yet he is obsessed with one Terran lady that he had met a number of years on Proziski. Now that the clan has demanded him to give away his kid, Er Thom finds himself powerless of becoming fascinated with any other lady. In extreme anxiety, he borrows a vessel from his brother and tracks Anne Davis at the University. All of a sudden, their love event runs afoul of the dissimilarity in their customs. Davis does not see it quite this way, with Er Thom being only a sperm donor. Anne refuses his presentation of the treaty marriage considering it as merely another momentary fling. This novel has fundamentals of comedy of etiquette, with misunderstanding taking place in both parties and with bitter feelings stirring the mix up. Nonetheless, such communication failure still occurs in every day life even among close acquaintances and still between dissimilar cultures on this globe. Even so, the two lovers struggle very hard in opposition to the misconception and without restraint open up to embarrassment with the spirit of dependence, but are momentarily derailed by thodelm. This narrative is a humorous demonstration that manners are not widespread. This work of fiction furthermore points out the manners existing only to aid interpersonal associations and that stupid insistence on inflexible formalism can demolish rather than take care of such relationships. In various respects, this story summarizes the thesis of the entire series: Anne and Er Thom add fresh life to a self-satisfied and hardened Liaden customs. Indeed a humor, but an epiphany as well. Maine-based authors Steve Miller and Sharon Lee teamed up in the late s to bring the story of Kinzel to the world, an incompetent wizard who loves cats and has thirst for justice, together with staff of true power as
