

Chapter 1 : Deep State Has Been Defeated, The New World Order Has Been Halted – The Millennium R

Someone might think it's not something new from De Bono, but in fact in the new millennium, many things are still happening stupidly. So everybody has to aware and keep in mind that it's our responsibility to change ourselves to make the world a better place and create a better future for the next generation.

A great number of human race all over the planet are celebrating the coming of the New Millennium in a couple of weeks. The immense success of the Internet has made Internet seem like a single event marking the new Millennium. But the Internet started 30 years ago and actually the developments beyond the Industrial Society have been happening in the last few decades, and it seems like humanity has now found the occasion of the Year to celebrate this glacial change to a new post-industrial society, and Internet is just the latest global medium like the invention of language, that is putting the fabric of this new civilization together. If inventing tools that entail some rules of inference, and in that sense are intelligent, can be resembled to first the invent of tool-making by the humans, the invention of Internet can be compared to the invention of language by humans. The Internet, as a means of communication of the humans, and inference tools, is eradicating the barriers of time and space and is making it possible for humans living in separate time zones or separate geographical space, to have real-time communication and cooperation, for production or social exchange. All the developments coined as "e-commerce", "e-tailing", "e-mail", etc. And although Internet and computers are the most important development at the dawn of the new Millennium, by eradicating the barriers of time and space at local, regional, national, and global scales, but this will not be the last glacial event impacting the human race in the new Millennium. As we are entering the new Millennium, we have already gained our first glances of the things to come. Some forecasters are forecasting the technological events forthcoming the next years. Breakthroughs in materials science, artificial life, and space travel may bring drastic changes in the human society in the years ahead and the scope of the impact on human physiology and habitat are hard even to predict in its general prospects. Many of the science fiction movies become obsolete even in a long before their predicted expected future dates arrive. What would be the best field of study and work if they had all the talents and means to get there? Should they go into law and medicine? Should they study computers and communications? What about getting into a career in business? Should they go for genetics, space studies, particle physics? How about management, economics, engineering, and politics? The above question is not really just a question about career planning for a youngster. It is essentially a vote of the present generation about what they view the future to be, as they try to talk about plans for their loved ones in areas of career and education. It is not hard to say that everyone knows that all the above choices may end up in a failure to meet expectations. Many of the recent generations who tried to predict their career goals and choose an educational path ended up surprised that the field they picked did not happen to grow as they thought and they had to change careers about three times in their lifetime. If my grandfather was very possibly in a continuation of the career and lifestyle of his father which may have been the same in a few generations, in contrast, the individuals in the last part of the 20th Century, not only did not stay in the same job for a few generations, but they even have had a number of career changes just within in their own lifetime. This is a major change that humans are not raised to handle well. But today the majority of human race is living like this. The above means that more and more people who live side-by-side are come from different national, religious, and work backgrounds and are changing as we speak. The result is not melting in the pot, or becoming one with the host culture and way of life, as it has been the past reality of the American experience. The result is actually developing a new culture that has a lot to do with what is in store for us in the future. In short this is related to the question youngsters, parents, and educators ask about our children as to what is the "good" thing for the future generation to study or what is a "good" career path to choose? The bottom line is that it is almost impossible to say which one of those fields is the "best" field for the future, as it is almost impossible to say what cultural norms are the most important ingredients of human culture in years. We may all imagine that this is so trivial, but if we look around us, we see that majority of the human race as we enter the new Millennium do not think in many areas of their life. How could the majority of people who are born in families with "religion A" end up in "religion A" if they really had thought and had chosen a religion, if they desired to choose any religion? As far as careers and fields, the ones who know how to think, will be able to be flexible to do what is most in demand at any time, and what one most enjoys at any time as well. In other words, as one used to learn to reading, writing, and math skills to think better, the scope will be a lot bigger but the goal would be to learn to think in all areas of work and life and this being the production requirement of the new Millennium, I believe, it would impact the human race in its social experience, at an unprecedented level. A social experience, which for the most part, has not been subject to much thinking in the past. Thinking is not just having knowledge or experience. In fact, it is easier to define thinking, as what it is not, rather than defining it as what it is. It is pretty hard to know what the result of real thinking by the human race would be in the way that we live, but this becoming the work and life requirement of the human civilization, as we are entering the new Millennium, it is pretty hard to escape this reality and the ones who arrive at it sooner may be better prepared to face the challenges ahead for the human race in the centuries to come. We may not know what an asset it is that we are able to be a thinking mind. Many ones who would at times wish that it would have been better if they were not a thinking person may reconsider their belief as we enter the new Millennium. Thinking is more an asset than land, industrial property, or even knowledge in the new world. The global access to Internet makes it possible for humans spatially and temporally apart, to think and communicate with each other, and have a vast amount of knowledge at their disposal in real-time.

Chapter 2 : true womanhood in the new millennium | in celebration of the thinking Christian woman

To millions of people world-wide, Edward de Bono's name has become synonymous with creativity and new thinking. He is the undisputed world leader in what may be the most important field of all in the future: constructive and creative thinking. Now, in New Thinking for the New Millennium, de Bono.

It was for this reason that I felt genuinely shocked when I came to learn that a local right-wing lobby group came out strongly against the local Jewish community on their website, hinting that Maltese society is victim of a covert Zionist conspiracy. I was equally shocked by the stone silence with which such an onslaught on ordinary members of Maltese society was met by the local media even though the MLP took a formal position of condemnation in this regard. This has nothing at all to do with the illegal immigration issue which certain new right movements are using as a platform. Tomorrow it will be undiluted racism of the kind we are already being treated to when certain exponents speak of safeguarding the European race and culture. Living as we happen to do in a multicultural society we cannot accept the premise that each culture should keep developing in isolation. Such statements make it easier to understand the Islamophobia we experienced recently as well as the anti-Muslim sentiments that were expressed, neatly cushioned under the cover of a clash of cultures and blending of incompatible beliefs. In saying so I am neither debasing nor trying to run down the European and Mediterranean culture that I believe in. Such attacks as we experienced recently go far beyond the deplorable and condemnable attacks against members of the local press who were merely exercising their right to freedom of expression. They are meant to undermine confidence in our political system in the hope of creating a power vacuum where such new elements could thrive and prosper. I believe that the illegal immigration issue is being used as a pretext because both major political parties on the island have long been making a clear distinction between the rights of refugees and the influxes of illegal economic immigrants. For this reason alone decisive EU action on the illegal immigration issue is called for as otherwise a weak-kneed approach will merely provide fertile ground for such right wing movements, even if they might still happen to be in their infancy. When the problem recently reached an almost explosive magnitude in the Canary Islands a senior policy adviser in the regional government of the Canaries made it clear that this is a big problem that requires military resources, intelligence resources, economic assistance and medical aid. The clarion call was loud and clear. They are far worse than that as they constitute a threat to Maltese society in general as well as to its values and core beliefs. Europe cannot merely sit back and react to racism when it happens and spreads its wings wide. It must pre-empt certain racist developments before they happen by taking decisive and positive action that shows that when it speaks of solidarity it literally means it rather than merely using it as a buzzword to pay lip service through it. It is even more worrying when so-called moderate right wing movements emerge, which claim they are closer to the mainstream political parties than to the extreme right movements in our midst. Proof that illegal immigration is being merely used as a pretext by these people was provided in the columns of this newspaper when a spokesman for a self-defined moderate right wing movement stated categorically that they are a multi-issue group and that they will continue to grow even if the immigration issue is solved. It is a pity that while the National Alliance has ostensibly moderated its political views in Italy through such exponents as Gianfranco Fini, who is nowadays even welcomed in such countries as Israel as much as he was welcomed in Arab Middle Eastern countries, we are seeing such movements emerge in our midst by trying to project themselves as a new mainstream party while, at the same time, resorting to racist platforms. Fascism and Nazism cannot be tolerated. It is not for me to try and quantify what kind of support a right wing movement might have. It is incumbent on us all to ensure that no fertile ground is provided for their emergence and ideological spread. From my contact with the electorate I can tell that a certain degree of xenophobia is real and present. This can only be neutralised if the competent authorities do not allow certain perceptions and attitudes to evolve into real threats. For this reason I genuinely call for concerted action both on the domestic front and on the international level. As a full EU member state we might have our obligations but we also have our expectations, particularly in the light of the recent turn of events in Spain. For a start, Europe must show it can come up with a serious policy for Africa. Mr Brincat is the main opposition spokesman on foreign affairs and IT.

It has confirmed my own concerns over the past couple of months and especially during the past 48 hours. It also represents some of the other private comments I have been receiving from readers, thoughts that also echo my own concerns. The purpose of the Christian life is to glorify God. Rather than expressing the importance of this truth or presenting thought that reinforces it, it seems like much that has been written here of late does exactly what we have accused the patriocentrists of doingâ€relegated our own preferences rather than the truth of Scripture to the center of our callings. It seems that there is a fine line between calling out the patriocentrists on their teachings and on their behaviors and relegating all men to a position of bad guy and I am appalled. There is a difference between running from legalism and tossing out every good and true teaching in Scripture for fear that we sound like legalists. There is no such thing as cheap grace, yet this is what many of the comments have sounded like. Until I can sort through this and once again feel peace that the conversation on this blog is glorifying to the Lord, TW will be on sabbatical. I want to regroup and will open comments again at some point in the future. Until then, they will remain closed but the site will stay open so people have access to the many thousands of great comments and thoughts, especially regarding the patriocentric movement. Here is the note I got this am: I truly appreciate all the work you do to expose the patriarchy movement for what it is!! Thank you, thank you, thank you. You have helped my family and so many others see there way out of that faulty teaching. I am however concerned about what I have been reading on True Womanhood. There has been a voice and a sentiment there that has been getting increasingly loud and I fear has become the dominant voice. I read there regularly and I know that were I still involved in patriarchy and came to True Womanhood today, like I did several years ago, seeking Truth and balance I would probably walk away and turn right back to patriarchy. This really concerns me because I think it plays right into the hands of the Patriocentric crowd. They do read that site as do many like me and never comment. I am sure when they see women arguing against having a biblical worldview and arguing for marrying an unbeliever they feel vindicated in their teaching. The dominant voices on TW today almost seem to affirm what the patrios teach, at least they would for someone just beginning to question patriarchy. If I had seen that three years ago I would have discounted TW then gone over to No Longer Quivering and realized that many of them were not Christians. Ok I am off my high horse and I will be praying about this. I know you are a strong believer and I see you attempt to correct these ladies with Truth but they seem to be so loud and their voice now is dominant on TW and that did not used to be the case.

Chapter 4 : Smart thinking: the essence of strategy in the new millenium - ePrints Soton

This is the thinking of analysis, criticism and argument. What we have not sufficiently developed is the thinking concerned with what can be. This is thinking that is creative and constructive, and which seeks to solve conflicts and problems by designing a way forward.

Just as Pizzagate is catching up with the U. That the Illuminati plot to install an overt One World Government is in absolute chaos. That their multi-century agenda to foist a state-sponsored One World Religion on humankind has been thwarted. And that their many conspiratorial plots to depopulate the world have failed dismally. The bottom line is that those who populate the peak of the pinnacle of the planetary power pyramid are clueless about how to proceed given the following state of affairs: When the deployment of just one EMP can knock out grid USA, really what would even nuclear war look like without a functioning electrical grid. The Kremlin also has access to Tesla-inspired, scalar-wave weaponry that has not even been imagined by the Military-Industrial Complex. In other word, the whole world now knows that all financial crashes and economic collapses have been meticulously fabricated by the banksters. Certainly the best financial engineers know this, as well as understand their utter impotence to avert the final blow out. And, they are right. However, if the international banking crime syndicate aka banksters tries this little move one more time, their whole monopoly game goes away forever. In other words the people throughout the entire planetary civilization will never again permit them to run their fatally flawed game on them. After all, the banksters have been outed like never before and now await a fate similar to the aristocracy during the worst years of the French Revolution. We all now know who they banksters are, what they have done in the past, and where they live now. We also watch their silly false flag operations flop every other day now. Some of us actually predict their nefarious deeds before they carry them out. Who is not familiar with the wreck and ruin wrought on the planet by the Rothschilds and the Rockefellers? By Big Pharma and Big Oil? By Monsanto and Halliburton? They are all known by their actions and can no longer hide, especially with so many interlocking directorships which mutually incriminate them all. The people want justice like never before. The product of their sleuthing has put the banksters in their crosshairs. That covert, ubiquitous network is known as Deep State. The Internet More than any other thing in recorded human history, the Internet has created a much more level playing field. Of course, this is anathema to the Illuminati as they have always been on top and will never tolerate anything but a tilted playing field. In this fashion, they are always playing with our money and our time and our energy and our real estate and our gold and other valuable assets. Which is why this piece is being written before the critical Inauguration Day of Donald Trump. More than any other monumental event of , the election of Donald Trump illustrates just how much things have really changed. Therefore, the writing is on the wall which clearly messages the ruling elites that their game of greed and money and power is over forever! It will again be the Internet that will empower the inhabitants of Earth to police the planet so that the banksters never set foot in a bank again. Just as a global citizens investigation has been underway regarding the Washington, D. Pizzagate and global Pedogate scandals, people power is emerging in ways and places never seen before. A Special Report on the Washington, D. Pedophilia Scandal The Pizzagate revelations, which are coming out fast and furiously because of the power and pervasiveness of the Internet, is creating a very conducive environment for the powerless to take back their power. Pedogate has likewise created an international forum for victims everywhere to speak their truth to power like never before. A Global Child Exploitation Crime Syndicate The Illuminati, the Neocons, the Zionists and Alien-Human Hybrid Controllers The ultimate disposition of this criminally insane cabal of psychopaths is the only remaining challenge for the global village to meet straightaway. Where will the world be safe with the likes of these entities still on the loose? Who would volunteer to house such a dangerous group of genocidal murderers, incorrigible kleptomaniacs, war-profiteering warmongers, and serial producers of chaos and pandemonium? This difficult question, then, is one that must be answered decisively and swiftly. Many commentators have spoken of a negotiated truce with these monsters, as though the planet is big enough for them and us to peacefully co-exist. In any event, now that they have no place to go once they have been stripped of their ill-gotten gains and misappropriated wealth, their influence and power over the affairs of men will be greatly diminished. Nonetheless, the wheels of justice must be allowed to turn so that their billions of victims can rest safely and soundly. Perhaps an off-planet penitentiary can be found that is within the legendary waterless region. Actually, they will probably find a way to wreck that realm as well. Incidentally, just who is it that belongs to the Deep State Network? The following graphic is a good place to start for the uninitiated, as is the following extended essay. The critical point of this article is that TPTB those who run the Deep State cannot crash the economy like they have always done, timed according to the Shemitah calendar. And, they will never get it back. Once the financial institutions are destroyed and economic systems devastated, they, too, will lose their age-old power and influence. The United States will be compelled to consider a whole new paradigm, specifically one that is free from the endemic corporate corruption and easily manipulated institutional arrangements. The banksters should be refused participation and prosecuted for their endless financial terrorism and economic devastation of nations large and small. Then, there will be no place for economic hitmen and financial terrorists who are employed by TPTB to take down countries rich and poor. The Witch is dead. As a healthy brand of nationalism spreads to the four corners of the planet, the sheer power and momentum may be enough to keep the cabal in check until they are dealt with appropriately. Perhaps the best thing that a President Trump can do as of his first day in office is to shut down the treasonous Mainstream Media. He must also remove the numerous traitors from Congress and intelligence agencies, as well as from the many other departments which comprise the U. As an unrivaled change agent, his work will be largely dedicated to tearing down the highly offensive Obamanation. In that capacity Trump ought to bring his wrecking ball everywhere he goes until the Obamanation has sufficiently fallen into its own footprint, so that the American Republic can be rebuilt in the image of the Founding Fathers. Every good builder knows that the better the demolition, the better the foundation for the new edifice to be built upon. For the world has been transformed into a financial prison as it has an economic jailhouse for most of humanity. May the patriotic nationalists of the world rise up quickly to consolidate the gains that have been thus far been made. Only through a concerted effort will a complete emancipation from these warlords and wardens be possible. Deep State must be dismantled so that the New World Order can be terminated, once and for all. Why is it that the bad guys are always working together more efficiently than the good guys? One would think that a righteous cause like saving Planet Earth would galvanize a movement like no other in modern history. We are still moving through exceedingly perilous times. Their extreme desperation is palpable and impactful, vengeful and unpredictable. Hence, it has never been more important to remain vigilant like sentinels guarding whatever space and time you were put here to safeguard. In the sweet aftermath of victory, dangers always lurk, especially in Much more context and deeper understanding will be provided in Part II of this analysis.

Chapter 5 : New Millennium including Popular Culture, Prices, Events, Technology and Inventions

Thinking is more an asset than land, industrial property, or even knowledge in the new world. The global access to Internet makes it possible for humans spatially and temporally apart, to think and communicate with each other, and have a vast amount of knowledge at their disposal in real-time.

Therefore choose life, that you and your descendants may live. We use words with great skill, but without thinking too deeply about their consequences. In fact, we often use them precisely to prevent ourselves from thinking too deeply. We now avidly market everything from tobacco to assisted suicide, using words like candy to entice approval, or like heavy artillery to drive critics back into their trenches. Words can sell anything. They can also justify anything. The result, unfortunately, is that fewer and fewer of us have confidence in the honesty of our public debates. Twenty-five years after Roe v. Wade, this means that any reflection on the "culture of life" begins from a deficit: About the only thing which remains irrefutable is experience. So let me begin with the story of a colleague. Bill stands alone on a cold pebble beach in the silence of a gathering twilight. A small boat approaches. A young man eases it through the water with an oar. Bill knows this man. Dan is in his mids. His round, bright eyes are alive with humor as he holds out a hand, the strong, muscled hand of an athlete, to help his old man into the boat. The dream first came the night he learned that Dan had Down syndrome. With Dan 7 years old now, so much of who Dan is and what he needs and does has become routine. Yes, he fits all the usual Down syndrome cliches employed to smooth the hard edge of a birth defect: He is also trouble on wheels, like every other first-grader. Dan is a person. He merely wears his imperfections on the outside, where they remind us uncomfortably of our own. And that is the "problem" with Dan, and all who have mental and physical disabilities. They are too obvious. We flee the imperfect behind a smokescreen of new programs, reformed vocabulary and ersatz sympathy, while politely arranging their prevention, or their destruction, with Orwellian understatements like genetic counseling. What would that even mean? Better three Dannys, five Dannys, a hundred Dannys, "than one Danny fixed according to my confused and unforgiving specs. We need each other. Abortion kills people like Danny. In fact, Down syndrome children are becoming extinct because the defense of reproductive choice and the pursuit of human "perfection" have been elevated to modern dogma. Some observers criticize the use of graphic fetal images to show the brutality of abortion techniques. But, undeniably, these pictures of broken bodies reconnect the hot air balloon of political debate to the gravity of the consequences, which involve flesh and blood. Pictures show what "pro-choice" rhetoric tries to hide. Our society markets this as "choice. Parents of a pregnant teen may think they have only two choices: And so we continue to kill, thinking it is somehow acceptable because we call it by another name. Euthanasia in Germany, Cambridge, , will see that too many of us have learned too little from the bitter experience of this century. That same eugenics movement persists today, in this country, albeit with a laundered vocabulary and pedigree, and better public relations advisers. Nor can we plead innocence due to ignorance. Society may start, as Oregon has, by allowing physician-assisted suicide in limited circumstances. But it can only end as a social "necessity. In the Netherlands, safeguards against the abuse of physician-assisted suicide were trumpeted as stringent. As Burleigh records, the Nazi euthanasia campaign began on the merciful-sounding pretext of relieving people of unbearable pain. It ended with killing the mentally and physically disabled, the infirm, the insane, the anti-social, the merely troublesome, and, of course, 6 million Jews. It is perhaps most disturbing of all that those who carried out the killing were often normal citizens who, in many cases, found the habit of "therapeutic killing" remarkably easy to acquire. The Hidden Costs The human costs of abortion are catastrophically high for us all because abortion connects and intertwines with other behaviors which determine our cultural character. Here in Colorado we take great pride in the beauty of our natural environment. Each fall, thousands of us make a trek into the Rocky Mountains to watch the aspen trees turn a spectacular gold. These trees are unique because each individual tree is woven together, under the soil, into a single, vast root system. As a result, the ill health infecting some of our aspen forests is really a symptom of deeper problems for the whole statewide aspen population. In a sense, there are no single aspen trees. In like manner, some may think abortion is an isolated issue— one abortion affecting only one woman, killing only one child. But a single abortion involves a father, a doctor, nurses, a receptionist, "counselors," a billing clerk, insurance people, family, friends and sometimes colleagues. Abortion does not take place in a vacuum. Its ripples are far-reaching. The deaths by abortion of more than 37 million children have had a corrosive effect on our attitude toward life itself. Instead of families, neighbors and communities helping women welcome and care for their children, millions of pregnant women are left to the mercy of a multi-million dollar industry which "quite crudely and literally" makes its profits from killing unborn children. A woman may suffer from guilt and even self-hatred for not having protected her child. She may also have no one to turn to for comfort, often because she concealed her pregnancy from family and friends, or because they encouraged her to have the abortion. In deeply personal ways, abortion has touched the lives of millions. No one in our society has escaped unscathed; everyone is affected by the hardening of the heart which comes when a culture tolerates killing. Abortion denies that human life is sacred. It undermines the very concept of human rights. Human rights can, of course, be violated in many ways: But efforts to protect and advance human rights cannot succeed if we do not first recognize that the right not to be killed is the base upon which all other rights rest. As Pope John Paul expressed it: It is the starting point of human rights, the necessary first step in building a culture of life. To not intentionally kill innocent human beings is "the absolute limit beneath which free individuals cannot lower themselves. Today, many, including those in government and in institutions that help to shape our cultural beliefs and behavior, do not recognize that abortion is a problem, or that euthanasia is the wrong direction to take. Over the past quarter of a century, the toleration of abortion, socially and legally, has clouded individual consciences and made it more difficult for many to distinguish between good and evil, "even when the fundamental right to life is at stake. But how does one help others to understand this? To penetrate the rhetoric of choice and highlight our human capacity for violence and self-delusion are not enough. To transform our culture into one which respects and defends human life, it is necessary to speak of a deeper and a greater truth: All human life is sacred. God is its author. We do not own it. This is why we are called to be a people of life, people who respect and actively promote life. Each of us has gifts to bring to this challenge. Each of us has a responsibility to help bring about a culture of life. No one is exempt. Our particular responsibilities flow from our state in life and from our personal gifts and talents. Bishops, for example, are called to teach and to encourage their brother priests and seminarians to hand on the Gospel of Life in its entirety. Parents face the challenge of raising their children to welcome new life as a gift from God, to respect those who are advanced in years, and to comfort the sick and the lonely. Political leaders have a responsibility to make courageous choices in support of life, especially through legislative measures that protect those who are mortally threatened "children not yet born and those who are very old or very sick, and those who, like Danny, wear their imperfections on the outside. All of us have a responsibility to participate in the social and political life of our nation to ensure that laws do not violate the right to life, and that they protect and promote life itself and the common good. We can ignore the truth about human life, and our obligation to protect, nurture and sustain it, but not without cost. The culture in which we live is an ecology. If we pump waste into the air we breathe or the water we drink, we become ill. We poison the root system that sustains us all. If we reject the value and dignity of human life, we build our culture on a lie, and its structures cannot endure. We can build a culture of life in the Third Millennium. But it will not simply happen. We have to live out the commitment to do so. To transform society, we are called to live and celebrate the Gospel of Life in our daily lives, lives marked by self-giving love for others.
