Finz smartly makes us wait until the last portion of the story to discover. Finz does a great job of humanizing her characters. This leads them to stumble in their lives and relationships just like real people do. The other thing I find uniquely special about Ms. Finz writing is that she has so many subplots going on among the minor characters in the story along with the main thread. As with the second book all the wonderful characters of the small Sierra-Nevada town of Nugget Ca. Many of them get prominent roles in this story too. Harlee is running an investigative service for those who delve into online dating to verify if their perspective mates are on the up and up or have a shady background. I did truly enjoy this story just as I had the previous two. There are now ten books in the series and if Ms. Finz can maintain the writing quality in each of them that she has in the first three, she has me hooked as a loyal reader. I liked Colin but thought that is really was a bit much to wait until the very last part of the book before his secret past was revealed. I just really did not care for this story in the Nugget series although I have liked others. Instead of using the term demophobia why not just use the term agoraphobia which is the more common This book is a disappointment in this series. Instead of using the term demophobia why not just use the term agoraphobia which is the more commonly known term for this condition. I am really not sure why I read the whole book except that I hoped it would improve So far I have not been disappointed. Feb 10, Pam rated it liked it This is a nice, sweet romance highlighting a second chance at life for both the hero and heroine. I enjoy small town romances; they always seem full of hope and interesting characters. Colin Burke has lived in Nugget, California for several years. He enjoys the quiet lifestyle and keeps to himself most of the time, and his passion for woodworking has gained him a reputation for quality furniture. The quiet comes to a close when someone moves into the cabin next door and he is a little leery, not This is a nice, sweet romance highlighting a second chance at life for both the hero and heroine. The quiet comes to a close when someone moves into the cabin next door and he is a little leery, not sure what to make of a nosy ex-reporter. While working in San Francisco she developed a small business as a detective of sorts, she digs up information on the profiles listed in Online dating services. She believes she can make this work full time, and begins to plan. When she meets the sexy neighbor she is intrigued and glad for the helpful hand as her cabin has not been lived in for some time. When I read the blurb, I was intrigued; I enjoy a man of mystery and the promise of second chances. It is unfortunate that the reason he is living away from civilization by himself, is not my favorite trope to read. Harlee is cute and very likable, reporters are usually portrayed as pushy in life but the author created a character that is nice and thoughtful as she reinvents her life. I enjoyed her interaction with the locals in town and of course with Colin. She likes him immediately and is happy whenever he shows up. He is worried that as a former reporter she might find out about him, but still is drawn to her. And that was the question I had, I was confused by the fact that Harlee never looked up information on Colin until the end and then she was mad, usually reporters are inquisitive and try to find out everything they can, but she begins this intimate relationship with Colin and never investigates " she has a business looking up online daters, why not him? This is the third in the series and can easily be read as a standalone, I have not read the first two and had no problem keeping up. A cute small town romance full of hope and second chances.

Do any of these laws apply to me? Am I a covered worker? To take leave under the Massachusetts Maternity Leave Act MMLA , you must be female, work for an employer with at least 6 employees and complete your probationary period up to 6 mos. If your work does not have probation, you need to work full time for the same employer for at least 3 months in a row. How serious does an illness have to be to make me eligible for FMLA leave? Illness The illness needs to be serious enough that: Poor health You may also be able to get FMLA leave if you or an immediate family member has such poor health that: Your spouse, children son or daughter , and parents are immediate family members for purposes of FMLA. The terms son or daughter do not include individuals that are 18 years or older. The birth of a child or planned surgery is a foreseeable need for leave. But when you have a sudden need for leave like emergency surgery, you must give notice as soon as you can. You do not need to give written notice to your employer, but it is always a good idea to ask for leave in writing. You can also ask for FMLA leave when you are adopting a child. What kind of medical verification proof may my employer ask for? If you take any leave for health reasons, your employer may ask you for a letter from your doctor that shows you have a serious health condition. But, your employer does not have a right to see your medical records. Your employer can require a second or even a third medical opinion. Your employer can also require that your doctor write additional letters as time goes by, but your employer must pay for any additional opinion. Your employer can also choose the health care provider who gives the second or third opinion. Your employer cannot ask a health care provider who has regular contracts with your employer. When do I need to provide my employer with the medical verification? It includes leave for the birth of a child or planned, non-emergency surgery. You must give your employer at least 30 days notice for foreseeable leave. If your employer asks for verification you must provide verification before you take the leave. Emergency leave For unforeseeable or emergency leave, your employer must give you at least fifteen days to provide the medical verification. Can I use paid sick, vacation, or personal time during my leave? Under all 3 laws, if your employer gives you paid sick, vacation and personal time, you can use that paid time during your leave. Your employer can require you to use paid vacation, sick or personal time. If the injury that the workers compensation is covering is serious enough to get FMLA illness or injury. What happens to my seniority, retirement, health and other benefits while out on leave? Under the Family Medical Leave Act and Massachusetts Maternity Leave Act, you have a right to return to your same job or a similar job that has similar status, pay and seniority. They do not have to create a new job for you either. How much leave can I take? Under the Family Medical Leave Act, covered workers can take up to 12 weeks of unpaid leave. Under the Massachusetts Medical Leave Act, female employees can take up to 8 weeks of unpaid leave. If you are covered under both laws, you get a maximum of 12 weeks in a 12 month period. If you suffer from a pregnancy-related disability, you may have a right to more than the 8 weeks MMLA leave. If you are unable to come back to work due to the serious health condition of your child, see if you can get leave under the FMLA see Question 2 above. Under the MMLA, the leave covers 8 weeks following the birth or adoption of the child. Under the FMLA, the leave needs to be close in time to the birth or adoption, and the 12 weeks can be taken all at once, or can be spread out over the year. I need to go to a school conference for my child, or take a relative to a medical or dental appointment. Can my employer refuse to let me go? This Act allows employees to take up to 24 hours of unpaid leave during any 12 month period in addition to the 12 weeks available under the FMLA. The SNLA allows employees to take up to 24 hours of unpaid leave during any 12 month period. The employer can require 7 days advance notice if you know ahead of time that you will need the leave. If your need for leave is, sudden, it is not "foreseeable," notify your employer as soon as possible. It is best to ask for the time in writing. There is no number of times you can take under the SNLA. The time you take is measured in hours. The employer can require you to take time off at least one hour at a time. It is illegal for your employer to fire you, or take any adverse employment action against you, because you took legally protected leave. If your employer violates your rights under the FMLA, you can file a private lawsuit, or bring

I used two peoples brand new trailers before they even got to use them. Had to tow the car to three different places by two different people, had people call in favors for me to get free work done on my car, so many offers to help, and I am just amazed at the people who I surround myself with. Seriously, you guys are awesome! Oh yeah, and on top of all of that a bunch of people pitched in and bought me a racing seat?!?! Who has friends that do that? Some of the people I still have never met! I need to find all of you at the next events and shake your hand! So basically I guess I figured it was going to be easy to put a seat in a miata, and I was super busy with school and work. I finally got some free time like a week before the AMP trackday and that is when I realized this seat was not going to be an easy fit. Had a friend who owns Pullz-on-Tuning cut and weld the trans tunnel for me. Downside to doing the trans tunnel notch, is that the catalytic converter will no longer fit in the car. Well I need to pass emissions and my birthday was around the corner! Something needed to be done about that. Got the car back and attempted to fit the seat again It seemed like there was going to need to be an even more aggressive notch cut into the transmission tunnel, which would mean less room for a cat!! Random pictures I took of the event: After the event I had a new deadline, get the car done by Miatapalooza! A friend stepped up to help get it done. Turns out we just needed to take a hammer to a small section in the transmission tunnel where it was contacting to make the seat fit. No more cutting and welded needed to make the seat fit! We did have to cut the door topper to allow the wings on the seat to fit inside the door. The wings on this seat are HUGE! The wings were the main issue for fitting this seat in a Miata. The next step was working on the exhaust. Thankfully that worked and the car was finally up and running! Now that the It may have taken awhile but we got it done. Now it was time to pass emissions! The car ended up failing because I forgot I had advanced the timing, and the cat on the car was a smaller high flow cat we used to fit. No problem, take the car back home and retard the timing and go back, right? I ended up passing the first part of the test but failed the second, so it did improve but not enough! The guy at the emissions place was cool as hell. Passed with flying colors!! The race car, the daily, and my sisters turd. Thanks again to Randy for putting the whole thing together! So the drive down to Tampa was a great time to test out a new seat, right? This thing is so comfortable! I did get sore after a while, but that happened in the stock seat too. The most amazing thing was fitting in the car with the top up and not hitting my head on the soft top! My hair used to graze the soft top and it was so annoying. Now I can sit up as tall as I possibly can and my head never touches! It is going to be fantastic!!!

Comment required December 15, 5: Clearly, the players were angry at Dan Issel for not signing Alex Rodriguez. Stan Kroneke refused to give Issel or his staff a vote of confidence when he bought the team earlier this year, refusing to extend their contracts past this season. Attendance already is down. His team then promptly lost its eighth straight, a point home squeaker to the 76ers, prompting Tony Robbins to contemplate suicide. Yesterday Jordan called George W. How bad were the Celtics against the Bulls? How bad was their performance? It was the first time all season the Bulls scored points and their largest margin of victory 28 since that Jordan guy retired. Ted Kennedy offered to drive Rick Pitino into retirement. My question to you is, are the Knicks a better team with or without Luc Longley? Shows what I know. Following impressive road wins against the Lakers and Jazz, the Bucks are at. So much for those counterfeit reports regarding the shopping of Glenn Robinson. Next thing you know, Larry Costello will be demanding a raise. Note to Nets fans: Please wait to be seated by the hostess. Against the Bucks, Kobe hoisted up 31 shots converting but eight while Shaq, the league-leader in field goal percentage, took This could start a dangerous precedent for players and management alike. Next thing you know, Allen Iverson will take off to belt out his nominated song for the Grammys. Or Mutombo will take a leave of absence to team up with Kevin McHale to illegally contract a disease. Or David Stern will excuse himself to infiltrate the Mafia to check on the validity of contracts. Until Shawn Kemp admits he has some kind of disorder, dysfunction, derangement, whatever you want to call it, and seeks the necessary help, his steady decline is guaranteed to continue. One way or the other, Kemp figures to be on the Blazers payroll long after Mike Dunleavy. Wonder what stance the commish would take if the Pistons decided to trade Joe Smith to the Wolves? Bogus report of the week: The free agent-in-waiting Mutombo has devised a formula for eliminating prospective places to play: Penny Hardaway was to be charged yesterday with threatening and intimidating his girl friend while carrying a gun at his side. Every team should be so lucky to have one player like Ben Wallace. The Spurs do, his name is Malik Rose. Disney has come up with a new theme park that all future free agents must pass through before joining the Magic. Maurice Taylor finally played one game like a power forward in the paint against the Sonics. Instead, he faked the defense right into position and blew the layup.

Well, my sister drives a Lava Orange Mazdaspeed which she named Cheeze-It, so I figured I needed to name my car after a food to keep with the trend. Well a friend of mine saw my car and said "aww look at the little nugget" and I knew that is what I wanted to name it.

Katie Schmidt This is a weird little post-Knockout nugget I dreamed up. I love this jetted tub, despite the fact I only had one pre-pregnancy experience with it. I flush with the memory of Rick and I making love here early on in our not-quite-a-relationship. Maybe I love it because of that one experience. I decide to do one last thing before getting in. A quick scroll through my contacts and the line is ringing. I let it ring until voicemail picks up. No answer there as well. I bring my phone with me for the time. I reflect back on my previous contractions. And then I frown. Two contractions later I hear Alexis come home, right as expected. She knocks softly on the door. I rationalize that nothing happening is intense enough to be worth mentioning. I can talk through these. I settle on my knees and cross my arms to lean my head on the side of the tub. My back feels better, even my pelvis feels better. The next contraction feels easier. I flip back over to my back. I listen intently as I hear Rick come home and wander into his office on his cell. When he ends the call, I hear Alexis come in. I try to make out a few words, but lose track as I focus on a contraction. I make out pregnant and sex. And birth control and careful, before the contraction fades. How can women labor and deliver this way? I knew he would cling to her as his little girl. I hang over the edge of the tub, shifting and rotating my hips as the pain waves through me. I let out a low sound as the peak of it clenches downwards and tight. My mind is racing as it passes. I should probably think about getting out and informing them this is it. The thought hits me like a ton of bricks. My body doing what it was designed to do to bring a baby from the inside out into life. Does this make it real? They were so real I smelled blood, grass and fresh earth. I pull back and recline against the back of the tub. He eyes my swollen breasts appreciatively as they float slightly at the water line. To send everything into full speed ahead to the hospital. I shake my head yes, things are fine. I can feel it coming though, as my uterus starts to tighten and spreads like wildfire. It just keeps building and building. I groan and feel my body clamp downward with a little grunt at the peak. First babies take hours and hours and hours. I feel my body press downward at the crest again. Our initial plan was to allow Alexis in the room for as long as I was comfortable, here at home I want her around for moral support. My breast are going to hang out everywhere in the pre-pregnancy top, but it will cover enough that she can come in without my carefully guarded modesty vanishing. He also comes bearing a glass of really cold, non-ice water and I sip that as he gets a washcloth wet in the cool sink water. I sit back on my heels and force on the bikini top. Rick wordlessly ties it for me before I slump forward and he lays the cloth across the back of my neck. Ricks eyes light up. His heart beat is steady and normal. Her joy at sisterhood spreads and I smile. Four minutes later, I feel it coming. I drop my head in a nod as I ride it out, letting my voice hum and vocalize deeply before I let a little grunt at the top. When it finally starts to recede, I look at Rick. I look at her, surprised by her description. This time at the top I recognize what my body is doing as I let out another soft grunt mid-moan. I slip my hand between my legs. She scurries from the bathroom, full speed to collect the keys and head to the parking garage. I groan and shake my head, another contraction hitting me hard. A small little pop sound before a huge gush of fluid hits the both the floor and water inside the tub. Rick stares at me horrified still holding open the towel as my water drips all over the floor. ### Chapter 6 : My "little" nugget. : cats

I want to get off my back, but the contraction has a strong steady hold on me and I can't move. I groan and feel my body clamp downward with a little grunt at the peak. Rick is at my side before touching my shoulder and I tell him to stop as the tail of the contraction disappears, I don't want anything touching me while I contract.

Most sales people use boring, outdated voice and email methods, which leave them sounding just like every other sales person in the world. If you want to get more return calls from your clients, then you have to do something different from everyone else out there - you have to stand out, be likeable, and actively deserve a return call. The fine line between persistence and stalking. I rarely ever give up. The trick is to call consistently, and if you leave a message, tell the customer precisely when you will call them back - and then stick to it. I usually say something like: Most experts agree that it takes at least 4 attempts to reach your prospect. Realistically, I find that number can be closer to 8. But some of my best customers today are those who I was initially the most patient with, and to whom I made multiple calls over a period of weeks, or even months. Let them off the hook. Send a handwritten note. Sending a handwritten note after your first sales call or presentation will dramatically increase your chances of getting a return call. Because a handwritten note increases your likeability, helps make the prospect feel good about you and encourages them to take your calls. I never cease to be amazed at the number of emails I receive from clients and prospects thanking me for my handwritten notes. Put them on auto-drip. This will help to keep you top of mind for when the time is right for them to make a decision, or go looking for a supplier. For more tips on how to stay in touch without straying into stalking territory, check out our article, The Fine Line Between Persistence - and Stalking! This is an excellent idea from Engage client Michael Freer, who uses it in both voice and email to drum up a response from clients who have unexpectedly gone silent: Your guidance would be greatly appreciated. Kind regards, Michael Freer P. On a happy note, we never did get any responses from prospects who were indeed trapped under their filing cabinets, saving us the difficulty and expense of organizing a costly rescue mission! After every conversation, you should gain agreement from the prospect as to next steps, and the date they will be accomplished. Document each call or email in your CRM, so you can remember when you last spoke with, left a message for or sent an email to a client. You can then bring up those dates in a subsequent message, such as: Separate the facts from your imagination. The following 3-step voice mail strategy works because it increases your chances of getting a return call, and it always gets you to the truth: Sorry I missed you. I promised Paul Smith I would be in touch with you, and that I would get back to him about our conversation. My number is , extension You can change the other two reasons based on your specific sales situation - for example, if this was a follow-up call after sending a proposal, you might say: Call early or late in the day. One of the ways I follow up with senior-level decision makers is to call either quite early in the morning say around 7: Everyone has their own preferred way to communicate. Your job is to find out which communication tool is easier for the prospect. Prepare for the "Final Approach. The last thing I want is to become a follow-up pest! I wish you all the best on your project, and thank you for considering us. Have some fun - and take a risk! Engage customer Greg Higgins uses this approach with great results: Maybe we can talk soon. And of course, he only uses this approach on the most desperate cases. Armed with skills developed from years of experience, Colleen helps clients realize immediate results, achieve lasting success and permanently raise their bottom line. Usually they pursue me pretty hard, inviting me to things and politely but persistently trying to schedule friend-dates. I sound like such a jerk in this email. Maybe I am just a jerk. Oh lordy these people probably write to advice columnists about me. They are fiddly and require too much maintenance for me to keep them alive. A For unwanted Facebook requests, delete them expediently and without guilt or discussion. Back in the days when social media was called LiveJournal, I used to have this in my profile: Some people see Facebook as a very loose and casual way to stay connected with everyone and anyone they know, so, why not accept every request? Some people want to rigorously cultivate their internet gardens. See if you can circumvent that process a little bit. We have to catch up sometime. Want to have coffee soon? Do not plead a prior commitment. It is direct and truthful. Men have got to learn how to hear it from women. White women have got to learn how to hear it from women of color. I definitely went through a phase of over-justifying and over-explaining every potential point of conflict that is so tell-tale in my fellow survivors. Start with low-stakes things, keep track of how often you say no or yes! How do we react? Do we accept it at face value? Do we expect the other person take care of our feelings? What gender, race, class, or other power dynamics are at play in how we react? Right before I started the blog there was a very nice woman that I knew through mutual friends. Sometimes I would try hanging out but when the day came I was never looking forward to whatever it was and mostly I felt guilty for not returning her friend-ardor. Not her fault at all, there was literally nothing wrong with her! But I felt how I felt, and I finally cut the cord with a message similar to this: I like that color on you. Have you seen [Real Friend]? I will now tell you the 1 secret for successfully extricating yourself from worrying about this: Let them think whatever they want. Be a basic amount of polite when you do see them, understand if they want to avoid you for a while, and enjoy your them-free life the rest of the time. Your whole goal was to let it go, so, let it go! Thanks commenters, for bringing to light an important point that I forgot to address.

Chapter 8 : NUGGET NO-SHOW HAS DAN READY TO BURST

a.m. " Alarm goes off for work. It can be so grueling to get back into the swing of things after a fun weekend. I get ready pretty fast because I opt out of my morning meditation and shower.

We had used our four comped nights at the Venetian so we decided to move to Mandalay Bay, our third hotel of the trip. DH has wanted to stay at MB since we first began going to Vegas. Staying at 3 hotels in 7 nights was not as big a hassle as we thought it might at first. The key to making each move a smooth transition was the rental car—especially a rental car with a large trunk. When we stayed at Golden Nugget and MB, we took our smaller carry-on luggage and left the big pieces in the trunk of the car. We drove to MB and checked in around Nothing fancy but all we needed. We dropped our bags off then headed out in search of food. We decided to eat at House of Blues. I had the pulled pork sandwich, DH had the shrimp po boy. Both were very good! After lunch we stayed in the casino most of the afternoon. Went back to the room and freshened up. Then we caught the tram to Luxor. DH had a domestic beer, I had a Mango-Peach margarita on the rocks. It was soooo good! For dinner, DH ordered the combination tostadas beef and seafood and I ordered the chicken fajitas. The food was good! The wraps that came with my fajitas were stale. They cracked when I folded them. Oh well, the fajitas ended up being better eaten with a fork than wrapped in a blanket of lard and flour anyway! Lol After dinner we went to see Carrot Top. In fact, I laughed so hard that I lost my voice for almost a week. After CT, we played more slots. The sign says that the tram stops running at DH and I started walking back to MB. We walked to the car and got the machine and arrived at our room almost an hour after leaving the Luxor. I tossed and turned for hours—finally, I ended up getting 3 hours of sleep! Not a good way to start your last day in Vegas!
