She had two older brothers, Harry born and Arthur 53 , an older sister Lorina born , and six younger siblings, including her sister Edith born to whom she was very close and her brother Frederick born , who became a lawyer and senior civil servant. Alice Liddell right with sisters c. The Liddell family moved to Oxford in Soon after this move, Alice met Charles Lutwidge Dodgson , who encountered the family while he was photographing the cathedral on 25 April He became a close friend of the Liddell family in subsequent years. Alice was three years younger than Lorina and two years older than Edith, and the three sisters were constant childhood companions. One story has it that she became a romantic interest of Prince Leopold , the youngest son of Queen Victoria , during the four years he spent at Christ Church, but the evidence for this is sparse. They had three sons: Reginald Hargreaves inherited a considerable fortune, and was a local magistrate ; he also played cricket for Hampshire. It later became the possession of Eldridge R. Alice was present, aged 80, and it was on this visit to the United States that she met Peter Llewelyn Davies , one of the brothers who inspired J. The manuscript resides in the British Library. For most of her life, Alice lived in and around Lyndhurst in the New Forest. A memorial plaque, naming her "Mrs. Reginald Hargreaves" can be seen in the picture in the monograph. As the Reverend Robinson Duckworth rowed the boat, Dodgson regaled the girls with fantastic stories of a girl, named Alice, and her adventures after she fell into a rabbit-hole. The story was not unlike those Dodgson had spun for the sisters before, but this time Liddell asked Mr. Dodgson to write it down for her. He promised to do so but did not get around to the task for some months. In the meantime, Dodgson had decided to rewrite the story as a possible commercial venture. Probably with a view to canvassing his opinion, Dodgson sent the manuscript of Under Ground to a friend, the author George MacDonald , in the spring of Relationship with Lewis Carroll[ edit ] Liddell dressed in her best outfit. Photo by Charles Lutwidge Dodgson Speculation on the sexuality of Charles Lutwidge Dodgson The relationship between Liddell and Dodgson has been the source of much controversy. Dodgson entertained the children by telling them fantastic stories to while away the time. He also used them as subjects for his hobby, photography. June Learn how and when to remove this template message The relationship between the Liddells and Dodgson suffered a sudden break in June Cohen that Dodgson may have wanted to marry the year-old Alice Liddell, and that this was the cause of the unexplained break with the family in June Woolf then uses this theory to explain why "Menella [would] remove the page itself, yet keep a note of what was on it. However, the former closeness does not seem to have been re-established, and the friendship gradually faded away, possibly because Dodgson was in opposition to Dean Liddell over college politics. The two Alices are clearly not identical, and though it was long assumed that the fictional Alice was based very heavily on Liddell, recent research has contradicted this assumption. Dodgson himself claimed in later years that his Alice was entirely imaginary and not based upon any real child at all. There was a rumour that Dodgson sent Tenniel a photo of one of his other child-friends, Mary Hilton Badcock, suggesting that he used her as a model, [21] but attempts to find documentary support for this theory have proved fruitless. Biographer Anne Clark suggests that Dodgson might have used Edith Liddell as a model for his drawings. Second, he dedicated them "to Alice Pleasance Liddell". Third, there is an acrostic poem at the end of Through the Looking-Glass. A boat beneath a sunny sky, Linger on dreamily In an evening of July Children three that nestle near, Eager eye and willing ear, Pleased a simple tale to hear Long has faded that sunny sky: Echoes fade and memories die. Autumn frosts have slain July. Still she haunts me, phantomwise, Alice moving under skies Never seen by waking eyes. Children yet, the tale to hear, Eager eye and willing ear, Lovingly shall nestle near. In a Wonderland they lie, Dreaming as the days go by, Dreaming as the summers die: Ever drifting down the stream Linger in the golden gleam Life, what is it but a dream? In addition, all of those who participated in the Thames boating expedition where the story was originally told

Carroll, the Reverend Duckworth and the three Liddell sisters appear in the chapter "A Caucus-Race and a Long Tale" but only if Alice Liddell is represented by Alice herself. The movie Dreamchild deals with her trip to America for the Columbia University presentation described above; through a series of flashbacks, it promotes the popular assumption that Dodgson was romantically attracted to Alice. This one is easy. Make up your own lyrics. On the First Day of Hanukkah, my dreidel won for me. O Little Town of Boston, Mass. Jingle Bells, Batman smells. You get the point. If you accept this challenge, your name will be added to the Pink Cowgirl Hat of Win and may very well be selected to win. This started out weird and got. I pitched out the pieces of corpse I could find, While visions of Black Death danced through my mind. Then I scrubbed at the stain and snarled at the scamp Who yawned and curled up on the rug for a nap. He flew like a flash, the window to fill, Tore up the curtains and threw up on the sill. Oh, crap, he was here! With a blasphemous curse, I jammed on my hose quick And checked the mouse stainâ€™seltzer sure does the trick! More rapid than models, I zipped up my dress And realized my hair and my house were a mess! Quit tripping me, furball! As wet leaves in a gutter pile up in a lump, And then overbalance and fall with a thump, So as the door opened, my heart likewise fell My date had been drinkingâ€™againâ€™by the smell. I called the night offâ€™his mouth curled in a sneer. He called me a name, and I backed up in fear. And then, in a twinkling, I heard four thumping paws The skidding and scraping of sharp little claws. As I drew in my head, and was turning around, Out onto the porch, the cat came with a bound. He was dressed all in white, from his head to his foot, But you could tell that his temper was brimstone and soot. Vengeance, poised to attack. But a flash of a fang and a twist of his head Soon gave me to know I had nothing to dread. He yowled not a word, but went straight to his work, And shredded the shirt off that asshattish jerk As my cat laid down havoc with teeth and with toes, I pulled back and punched the guy right in the nose. He fell off the porch, through his schnozz gave a whistle, But the cat landed clear, like the down of a thistle. Go create something fabulously wrong! It would be weird.

Of Doggerel and the Dean. During his wife's semester-long visit as guest lecturer at bucolic Garwood College, private investigator Phil Oxnard is called in to investigate a rash of campus robberies.

I have been guilty myself. But not as often as I view here. When this novel was written, there seemed to be a much higher regard for self-examination. It starts off slow and in a rather tedious progression to the history of a Cathedral, and its authority or district leader throughout years or more. A history also of timepieces, watches, clocks from those eras and through the eyes of the present city dwelling watchmaker, Isaac. But the center is truly the Cathedral city itself. It too, works like a time piece. The city in England that grows as a market town in the fens, around the Cathedral on its hill. The city that is not London of voluminous strangers. And we get here 4 to 10 exact personal prisms of individual personalities for the people who have lived in this fen placed city, all of their lives. Some to a nearly complete cognition and others to merely a smaller reflective mirror to part of the crystal or flint inside. They are everyday people. Everyday people who strive- tow the lines. People with a job. And beyond that a place or fixture in their unique societal puzzle. And without them the puzzle lacks. It would not be complete. Like a jigsaw piece set with 10 key pieces missing. Oils of emotive marvels and blessed by Light that engulfs them. The shadows is this masterpiece are not black, they may be dark, but it is the dark of quiet, peace and eventual contentment. Yet it is not free from all sorrow. They are flawed, these everyday people. They are often unsuccessful, or beyond any notice, or consistently rejected, or ill, or tired, or with odd physical flaws. But they have and hold their identity. The chapter on Miss Montague, her thoughts, that chapter alone is worth the 5 stars. Joy in all the small things. There is also some inclusion to fate here. How having a fall over a rug, or an open door in a strange place, or just having an odd encounter while shopping or a look over a pew- how all of that can change a whole life! Not often, at all. But I do know it has happened to me. One time when I was very young and locked myself out of the house comes to mind. This is a book to take very slowly. And to not be discouraged by the long I can just hear the "boring" swears resounding introduction and time piece lessons- but to continue to the crux. Come into that dark foyer and into the Cathedral and just sit awhile. Please read this one.
