Our friends are off to enjoy meeting more new friends. Unhappy Dog Meet Barky. He never gets the chance to run and play. Then he meets Oliver. Kite High Oliver and Jumpy are flying their parachute with a wooden carriage. A new friend might help. Butterfly Trouble Oliver and Jumpy meet some Butterflies. They end up lettin Another adventure with Oliver and Jumpy. They end up letting too many go. Their new friend will help them fix things. Stejskal takes the children on a lovely adventure with his friends, Oliver the cat and Jumpy the Kangaroo. Oliver and Jumpy like to jump into fun and helping others. I love that these books are short and sweet. They also give children the chance to let their imaginations fly. They can picture themselves with Oliver and Jumpy. Perfect to send them off dreaming of wonderful adventure and new friends. I have always had positive feedback from the children I share them with. Your littles will love these stories. I gave this book 5 cheers out of 5 because they make us giggle and let our minds wander. Young children will enjoy them and even will ask questions about the deeds Oliver and Jumpy are doing, what they should. So he asks him what is wrong. The dog is bored and likes to play with Oliver. Jumpy let him out and they have a great time together. They promise to Another fantastic story about Oliver and Jumpy Three new stories about Oliver, the black cat with a hat and Jumpy, the kangaroo and her Joey. They promise to play one day again. They step on it and the wind, as it picked up the carriage flew high up. And then, well, you better read the story what happen next and how they got saved. He wakes up and find out that a boy was chasing it to catch it and to put it into a jar. The butterfly pleads Oliver to help him. All three stories are wonderfully written with fantastic drawings and moral lessons. When annoyed by someone, ask that person what is wrong and they solve it together; when in trouble, ask for help; when another is in trouble willingly help.

Sylvester, still hoping to make Tweety his personal snack, is incensed at the thought of some other cat getting the little bird first and vows to follow Tweety around the world and catch the canary himself; unbeknownst to either one, a thief is also present. Tweety sets a course to Paris, but is blown by a strong wind to the Swiss Alps, where he gets trapped, as does Daffy Duck, but Bugs Bunny saves them both. He goes back to Paris, this time successfully and outsmarts Penelope Pussycat, where he causes Pepe le Pew to mistake Sylvester for a female skunk. Tweety continues on to Venice, but grows overweight after eating too much bird seed. On a longboat, he faces a lot of cats, but he overpowers them and goes back to normal. While attempting to sleep in Egypt, he is chased into a tomb by Sylvester and several other cats, but escapes. Sylvester disguised himself as a dancing woman in a basket and takes it off as he caught Tweety, but when he sees hieroglyphics, Sylvester thinks he just sees images. A mummy cat army beats Sylvester as Tweety resumes to his escape. In the Chinese Himalayas, he befriends another canary known as Aogah the name coming from her ability to imitate a horn, after rescuing her from a sacrifice using Hugo the Abominable Snowman. They are taken by more winds into Mexico, Brazil, Argentina and Japan and eventually make it onto a boat to the United States. However, Sylvester catches up with them, but Hubie and Bertie cause him to slide into the water. Tweety and Aogah are able to save him, but end up on a beach in Australia. Sylvester meets Taz and they chase the two canaries, resorting to a motorcycle, but end up in the ocean with Taz holding the sign from Wile E. Tweety and Aogah ride a windsurfer to San Francisco. The two canaries make it safely on a train to Las Vegas, where they escape more cats. There, they trick Sylvester into getting onto a Concorde alone. The two canaries are caught up in an Atlantic hurricane and briefly washed up on an island, but outsmart more cats and escape back through the hurricane. In a pub in the English countryside, they discover the thief and manage to outsmart him. Sylvester attempts to frame Tweety by passing his license to fly for a stolen passport. He almost succeeds, but the real passport is in his hand, thus getting himself arrested instead to frame Tweety and himself. They are able to get back to London, only to find that they managed to get just 79 pawprints. Tweety then realizes he forgot Sylvester so he flies into the prison truck taking him away and is able to get his pawprint, thereby saving the park. Tweety gets happily knighted by the Queen and Sylvester goes to prison for just 50 days for trying to frame Tweety and vows for future revenge.

Chapter 3 : Best Family Activities In Midlands | Oliver's Travels

The Midlands, a vast swath of land that cuts through the heart of the country, is a collection of counties often overlooked by holidaymakers in favour of the wilderness of the north or the gentility of the south. This, however, is a mistake; the Midlands has plenty to offer all types, from the historic market towns of Lincolnshire and Northamptonshire to the buzzing, cosmopolitan city of Birmingham. Wild nature awaits explorers, while towns like Stratford and Cambridge offer a rich literary legacy for heritage hunters. The Peak District – Escape to the rugged hills, lakes and caves of this gorgeous pocket of wilderness. Lincoln – Visit the impressive castle and cathedral in this historic town. Summer in the Midlands has a better guarantee of dry weather than in many other parts of the country. Places like Stratford-Upon-Avon are blessed with more than their fair share of sunny days, during which the river glistens and the town comes to life. Spring and autumn bring out different colours in the landscape, but the weather can be more changeable than the summer months. Winter in the Midlands is often characterised by grey skies and rain, many National Trust attractions close and the national parks become wet, windy and unwelcoming. Cars are the most flexible option for travelling in the Midlands, although navigating the infamous spaghetti junction outside Birmingham can be a daunting experience for first-time visitors. Most major car rental services operate out of cities like Birmingham, Leicester and Lincoln. Bus travel in the Midlands is slightly more flexible than trains, and can take you to smaller villages. Visit Traveline Midlands for timetables and routes. Places like the Peak District, the Fens and the forests of Arden and Sherwood are best explored on foot. Walking Routes has a comprehensive list of trails across England, including tips on where to go in the Midlands. Hidden Gems The gentle, rolling hills of the Lincolnshire Wolds have been designated as an Area of Outstanding Natural Beauty and cover enough ground that a day on the walking trails, watching wildlife or taking photos can often be spent without so much as seeing another soul. The ruins of , in a charming village of the same name, are the largest in Britain, while the medieval High Street of Henley-in-Arden is a quintessentially English sight. The Theatre Royal and Nottingham Playhouse are artistic hubs in the county, while museums dedicated to industry, brewing and art make for interesting days out. Wollaton Park, next to the university, is the home of a grandiose mansion and herds of deer. The kilometre walking route of Wolverhampton Ring encircles the industrial Black Country city, and was devised by a retired teacher to show off some of its undiscovered places. The route takes you up hills, through villages and along canals, with some spectacular views along the way. The National Trust own several properties throughout the Midlands, all of which have their own unique reasons to visit. Some, such as the elegant mansion of Chatsworth House, are well-known and loved; others, like the lakeside Croome Court home to intricate tapestries and Stoneywell which has an interesting artistic heritage are less popular but just as captivating. If a child were to list all the things they might want for a dream holiday, the chances are they could find most of them in the Midlands. The fun of a family holiday also lies in introducing children to new and exciting experiences, such as cable cars that climb through the Peak District, trains that run through Shakespeare country and underground caves that are decorated with limestone stalactites. The sheer range of activities, wide open spaces and quirky accommodation available in the Midlands makes the region an ideal destination to take the children. Embrace the excitement of everything on offer and adults, too, will discover childlike wonder once again. The Best Family Friendly Activities in the Midlands The midlands is home to Bournville, which will forever be associated with something children and adults alike can appreciate – chocolate! And yup, you do get to do a tasting! The Peak District National Park offers almost endless opportunities for adventurous families, from stunning guided walks to events and activities throughout the year. Head underground to learn the history of this cave complex and take in its wondrous sights, with the stunning central show cave being the main attraction. You can also enjoy a great cycle around Chasewater in Burntwood. For a ramble that takes in all forms of nature, try Cannock Chase in Staffordshire. If all this seems a little high energy for your taste, never fear. Those hoping for a more relaxing romantic break or laid-back group retreat can turn down the dial with some less strenuous activities. Gentle strolls in the countryside, leisurely drifts in barges and hidden-away woodland spas are also on the menu here. Need some help filling your itinerary? Check out their website for a full and exhausting sounding! Want to get a bit closer to nature in a new and exciting way? You can enjoy a narrowboat cruise down the waterways, taking in some beautiful scenery and underground routes not normally accessible to the public. The Midlands is also home to some great museums and galleries, especially in and around Birmingham. For a complete culinary experience of the Midlands, we recommend getting involved with making food yourself. Whether proving dough for your own bread, learning a few professional cooking skills or touring the food factories, the warm and friendly Midlanders are more than happy to let you inside their world. Of course, some of you may feel that you get enough hands-on cooking experience at home and that holidays are a time for steering well clear of the kitchen. Choose between Indian, pub grub or trendy eateries. Concentrating on rustic recipes with a contemporary twist, the menu changes seasonally so you know that whatever you order, its ingredients will be at their very tastiest. Want to take your balti to the next level? There are quite a few, but a friendly local will always be happy to point you towards a nearby favourite. Looking for something to go with your pint? Pork scratchings originated in the West Midlands, and make the perfect accompaniment to a local brew. For a hearty and traditional Midlands breakfast, keep your eye out for Staffordshire Oatcakes. A bit like a pancake made with oatmeal, this savoury snack is fantastic served with bacon and lashings of melted cheese. If the huge and tempting!
