

Chapter 1 : On being a doctor

The Pros of Being a Doctor: Despite the changes taking place in the profession, applications to medical schools rose to an all-time high in the late 's and early 's and while they have stabilized in the last ten years, schools still receive 3 to 5 times more applicants than they have positions for.

However, if you are only interested in the money, you should look for another field. As a physician you will enjoy not only monetary rewards, but humanistic rewards which are priceless. We can all imagine how painful it must be to tell a family that their loved one has just died, but can you imagine how amazing it must feel to repair the defective heart of a tiny baby? Or to remove a malignant tumor from the brain of a young mother? Or to help an injured man to walk again, thereby giving him the gift of dignity, the ability to support his family, and the freedom to play catch with his son. Many people think of medicine as a "calling" much like priesthood. To some extent this may certainly be true. You must have a great desire to become a physician. A driving passion to help people, to be challenged, and to learn throughout your life. You will sacrifice your time and energy for the care of your patients, often forsaking your family and yourself. Being a doctor is simply who they are, not just what they do. The desire to help others a need within them, like breathing, or hunger. Once you have made the decision to become a doctor, you must pursue it whole-heartedly. Demystifying the process and the profession is only the first step. The rest is up to you. The Process of Becoming a Doctor For centuries, the physician has been one of the most respected members of society. Shamans of indigenous tribes were revered for their knowledge of the healing arts. The family doctor often treated patients for their entire lives and was called upon not only to assist in births and deaths, but for advice and guidance as well. That seems to be changing somewhat in the litigious society of today. The Cons of Being a Doctor: Malpractice insurance has skyrocketed in the wake of many lawsuits aimed at specific physicians, hospitals, and the field of medicine in general. Distraught families no longer blame God or fate for the death or disability of loved ones, they blame the doctors who treat them. As in any profession, there are certainly some who deserve such blame. However, careful, caring physicians are more and more often finding themselves fighting legal battles for their right to continue practicing. In what other profession can a simple mistake cost a life? Doctors are not heartless, their failures weigh heavily on them. Yet neither are they perfect, and often we expect too much from them. Today you may find an Ophthalmologist selling cars, or a Neurologist writing textbooks. Many good doctors are leaving the profession, citing rising malpractice costs and a lack of respect from their patients. Consequently they must work longer hours and see more patients to make ends meet. You find many doctors leaving their practices for jobs with pharmaceutical companies, hospital administration, and research. Positions with high salaries, better work hours, and less stress. The Pros of Being a Doctor: Certainly one reason for this is that medicine is still among the highest paying and most prestigious professions in the country. The following chart shows the average salaries of US physicians: Median net income in US dollars of M.

Only you can decide if the benefits of becoming a doctor would adequately compensate you for the time, money and effort required to earn a medical degree. Being a doctor requires completion of an undergraduate degree, four years of medical school and up to seven years of internships and residency. Start by asking yourself what matters most to you in a career. If you are motivated by a sense of purpose, desire to make a difference and the deeply gratifying feeling of saving lives, then becoming a doctor may be your calling. Other perks include high earning potential, comfortable lifestyle and job security. Job Satisfaction Doctors experience great fulfillment in using their medical knowledge and skills to improve the lives of their patients. Becoming a doctor will afford you an opportunity to specialize in whatever area of medicine you consider most appealing and personally rewarding. For example, general practitioners treat many different ailments and they enjoy high status in their community. Surgeons diagnose complex conditions, perform intricate operations and develop cutting-edge surgical techniques, which is intellectually challenging work. Psychiatrists find gratification in diagnosing and treating debilitating mental-health conditions. Discovering your niche in medicine can lead you to a job perfectly suited to your interests and skills. Opportunity to Help Others Many doctors go into medicine to help others recover from illness and lead healthier lifestyles that can promote quality of life and longevity. Doctors continually seek new methods and medications to treat patients and improve overall functioning. If you feel passionate about providing care to those in greatest need, you may consider volunteering for humanitarian organizations in the United States or abroad. For example, Doctors Without Borders seeks qualified physicians to live and work in developing countries around the world for weeks or months at a time. Medical care is provided in disaster areas, refugee camps and conflict zones. A small stipend is provided along with benefits such as insurance, annual vacation and student loan forgiveness eligibility. You will be able to travel and take exciting vacations. According to the U. That means that half of all medical doctors earned less than the median salary, and half earned more. Job Security Finding a job after finishing your studies should not be a problem. Opportunities abound for doctors and physicians, especially in rural and economically depressed areas that have great difficulty recruiting and retaining physicians. The BLS projects that between and , the demand for doctors will increase by 13 percent, which is faster than average as compared to other occupations. Contributing factors include higher levels of chronic illness and the large demographic of aging baby boomers with age-related medical conditions. Cardiologists and radiologist will be in high demand. Of the , doctors working in the United States, approximately 50 percent work in private practice. However, increasing numbers of doctors are moving from private practice into hospital-managed care.
