

Chapter 1 : Hands-On With The Canon EOS 6D Mark II - Outdoor Photographer

Capturing the beauty of the natural world, snow-capped volcanoes, fog-shrouded mornings, and flower-covered vistas, is one of the joys of photography, and this guide will show you how, whether you choose to use a simple point-and-shoot camera or learn the intricacies of single lens reflex or a new digital.

This should be an easy study as you look at the color changes and the dropping of leaves in your willow. Pay particular attention to suggestions 8 and 9 in Lesson for specific autumn willow study ideas. Year Long Tree Study in the Handbook of Nature Study Lesson pages My favorite suggestions are to watercolor the shape of a tree with its autumn foliage and to carefully compare leaves found on your tree for any variation. Tie a string on a twig attached to your willow. Both Ultimate and Journey level members here on the Handbook of Nature Study have access to a new autumn willow notebooking page for recording your autumn observations. Look for it in your printable library. Join us each Friday for a different nature study topic. Make sure to subscribe to this blog to receive the weekly challenge right in your email box. If you want to become a member here on the Handbook of Nature Study, you can click the Join Us button for more details. Benefits include those shown above including access to ebooks, notebooking pages, archived newsletters, and new ebooks and printables published during your membership. In our continuing effort to learn the bird migration patterns in our new habitat, our dining room chalkboard list of monthly birds is a valuable tool. It creates a simple record of birds that visit our feeders, our yard, and fly by our back windows. There was a new bird this month! The western meadowlark became my autumn bird study. I was really glad it appeared before I had my hip surgery so I could go outside and try to take a photo. These two sources gave me enough information to create a good nature journal entry. I hope to someday hear this songbird singing – perhaps this spring. Nature journal page from Project Feederwatch November 10, is the first day we can start counting birds that visit our feeders as part of the Project Feederwatch citizen science opportunity.
