After his death in 1252, his widow, Dervorguilla of Galloway their son and grandson both became Kings of Scotland made arrangements to ensure the permanence of the college in that she provided capital and in formulated the college statutes, documents that survive to this day. Traditions and customs The front of the college in Broad Street. The whole of the front of Balliol College as seen from Broad Street, looking west. Along with many of the ancient colleges, Balliol has evolved its own traditions and customs over the centuries, many of which occupy a regular calendar slot. The patron saint of the College is Saint Catherine of Alexandria. On her feast day 25 November, a formal dinner is held for all final year students within Balliol. This festival was well established by 1287. Another important feast in the College calendar is the Snell Dinner. This dinner is held in memory of John Snell, whose benefaction established exhibitions for students from the University of Glasgow to study at Balliol the first exhibitioners were matriculated in one of whom was Adam Smith. This event happens on the last Friday of Michaelmas term each year. On this occasion Balliol students congregate in the college hall to enjoy mulled wine and the singing of hymns. The evening historically ended with a rendition of "The Gordouli" see Balliol-Trinity Rivalry below on Broad Street, outside the gates of Trinity College, although in recent years the song has been sung from within the college walls. The Masque of Balliol In 1687, seven mischievous undergraduates at Balliol College, Oxford, published The Masque of B-II--I, a broadsheet of forty quatrains making light of their superiors "the Master and selected Fellows, Scholars, and Commoners" and themselves. The outraged authorities immediately suppressed the collection, and only a few copies survived, three of which found their way into the College Library over the years, and one into the Bodleian Library. Verses of this form are now known as Balliol rhymes. The best known of these rhymes is the one on Benjamin Jowett. This has been widely quoted and reprinted in virtually every book about Jowett and about Balliol ever since. The other quatrains are much less well known. William Tuckwell included 18 of these quatrains in his Reminiscences in 1887, but they all came out only in 1907, thanks to Walter George Hiscock, an Oxford librarian, who issued them personally then and in a second edition in 1917. The traditional Gordouli is said to have been sung by Balliol and Trinity men in the trenches of Mesopotamia during the First World War. The fact that Balliol in contrast to Trinity had admitted a number of Indian and Asiatic students also gave many of the taunts from the Trinity side a distinctly racist tone: Balliol students, for example, were sometime referred to as "Basutos". Sayers, Lord Peter a Balliol man is asked whether he remembers a certain contemporary from Trinity. One of the wittier raids from Balliol, in 1887, involved the turfing of the whole of Trinity JCR complete with daffodils. A lease dating to 1887 to them is the traditional "foundation" date. The oldest parts of the college are the north and west ranges of the front quadrangle, dated 1252, respectively the medieval hall, west side, now the "new library" and the "old library" first floor north side. The neighbour to this is the Fisher Building of Stc X The undistinguished looking Stc XI, south west side, is in fact the oldest structure in this quadrangle, 1252, originally intended as accommodation for scholars from Bristol, hence its name. Stc XV by Warren of filled in the last gap of the quadrangle; the ground floor and basement is the principal Junior Common Room. The "new" hall replacing that in the front quadrangle is built on land given by Benjamin Jowett, a Victorian master of the college. Also by Alfred Waterhouse of 1887, it contains a Willis organ for concerts, again instituted by Jowett. The ground floor contains the college bar and shop i. The majority of research and post-graduate students are housed in the Holywell Manor complex, on Manor Road a little further south of this. The church dates to the 15th Century. Jowett Walk has also provided accommodation for some non-Balliol undergraduates, as part of an arrangement with Wadham College. The quad at Balliol is the scene of the well-known limerick that parodies the immaterialist philosophy of Bishop Berkeley: I am always about in the Quad. Notable people In common
