Set in a Montessori classroom, these peacemaking stories were written for beginning readers. Each story shows how the characters prevent or resolve a conflict. Act out the stories and discuss what it means to be a peacekeeper.

She argues that the way in which this community lives, talks and collaborates with locals reinforces "a pervasive power disparity between the interveners and their intended beneficiaries". Interaction with the local population is often discouraged. But Henry argues that there should be more, not less, of it. When interaction does happen, it is often in the form of peacekeepers parading in their armoured vehicles and blue helmets, something she says furthers the "dehumanisation of the host population". Peacekeeping and prostitution There is one particular economy that can be fed by the presence of peacekeepers. In the International Organization journal article Peacekeeping, Compliance with International Norms, and Transactional Sex in Monrovia, published in late , researchers found that more than 50 percent of women surveyed in the Liberian capital, Monrovia, had engaged in transactional sex. Widely touted as the first quantitative study of the association between a UN peacekeeping operation and transactional sex, the report stated: A Gendered Analysis, writes that bringing peace to Cambodia "was accompanied [by] the deployment of soldiers who assumed that their prerogatives as militarised men included access to prostitutes, as well as a freedom to pursue, harass, and assault local women". What constitutes exploitation and what abuse? The UN discourages sexual relations between peacekeepers and the local community, arguing that it fosters unequal relations. It is almost always a last resort and peacekeepers must reflect on their positions of power and privilege. Olivier Salgado, the spokesperson for the UN Department of Peacekeeping Operations, explains the distinction between the two. Sexual abuse is a physical act committed whether by force or under unequal or coercive conditions. Both sexual exploitation and sexual abuse, however, violate the fundamental values of the United Nations and its standards of conduct. But academics and researchers disagree over the effectiveness of this approach. But Gill Mathurin, communications director of Aids Free World, on the other hand, argues that it is "not possible for there to be consensual sex between UN peacekeepers and the people they are sent to serve". Higate believes there needs to be greater clarity over how sexual relations are understood in the context of the power dynamics between peacekeepers and the host population. My brothers and sisters were in the house at the time," she says. The women involved said they were hungry, homeless or needed items for their babies or households. Hundreds of children were subsequently born in Bunia. Since , there have been 47 allegations of sexual exploitation and abuse in the DRC. These include 83 peacekeepers and 65 survivors. The Scarran and Peacekeeper fleets engage one another Far from the water world where John Crichton and Aeryn Sun have been crystallized in the series-ending cliffhanger, a Peacekeeper fleet under the command of Scorpius and a Scarran fleet under Emperor Staleek engage in battle. John Crichton, whose mind contains the knowledge to make wormholes into weapons of mass destruction. The water world itself turns out to be the last outpost of the Eidelons , a race who once used their empathic abilities to encourage peace. Since their homeworld of Arnessk was made uninhabitable 12, years or "cycles" before, the surviving Eidelon have forgotten how to use their abilities. Two Eidelons, one a soldier, are selected to contact the revived Eidelon, and they board Moya as Scorpius arrives in orbit. Noranti remains on the water world to educate the Eidelon descendants on their lost culture. Due to the ongoing war between the Peacekeepers and the Scarrans, Scorpius and Sikozy accompany the crew with the passcodes they will need to get out of Peacekeeper territory. It is soon very apparent that when Rygel ingested their crystallized particles, the particles comprising the unborn child remained inside him, and the fetus is now growing inside him. At the edge of Peacekeeper space, Moya is harpooned and boarded by Tragan bounty hunters hired by the Peacekeepers to search ships leaving their territory. After a firefight, the Tragans are repelled just before Moya starbursts to Arnessk. On the planet, they enter the Eidelon temple in the company of their former crewmate Jool ; however, the Hierarch is not encouraged to help their efforts until he meets his descendant first hand. When the Eidelons entered suspended animation , without their moderating influence, the Peacekeepers became a militaristic expansionist empire. Moya is threatened with destruction unless everyone except Pilot leaves her. Under a Scarran heat probe, Crichton protests that he is unable to give Staleek the wormhole weapon knowledge he seeks. By the time Staleek and Crichton return to the Scarran Decimator, he appears convinced and even receptive, under the subtle influence of the Eidelon Hierarch, to seeking an end to war with the Peacekeepers. Crichton helps Sikozy adhere to the ceiling above the gas so she can pyrokinetically release a burst of flame that ignites it, blasting their prison open while the Luxans attack at the same time. They escape from the Scarrans, re-board Moya, and starburst away. On board Moya, Scorpius tries to persuade Crichton to yield the wormhole knowledge to the Peacekeepers. Crichton rages that he does not want to give the knowledge to the Peacekeepers, the Scarrans, or anyone. His only concern is for Aeryn and their soon-to-be-born child, but in order to live in a safe galaxy , he may have to take desperate measures. He flies Farscape One back to see Einstein, who unlocks the knowledge Crichton needs. The water world becomes a battleground between the Peacekeepers and the Scarrans, and Moya is caught in the crossfire. After they find him terrified and awed by the personality he has assimilated on the Scarran ship, the crew of Moya takes a transport pod to the surface. The siege They find the Eidelon city under siege, and only a handful of survivors. During the siege, Scorpius discovers Sikozy has been relaying their position to the Scarrans in exchange for a promise for them to free her people from servitude. In the middle of battle, Aeryn goes into labour and gives birth to a baby boy. Meanwhile, Jothee and Noranti have been rescuing Eidelon survivors from the burnt-out city. He stays behind to cover their retreat as the living ship retrieves the others in her docking web. Commandant Mele-On Grayza , now in charge of the Peacekeeper fleet since she poisoned her lover Maryk, the Grand Chancellor, squares off against the Scarran fleet above the water planet. High above the water planet, a small wormhole appears. Everyone is initially unimpressed, but the wormhole begins to expand exponentially, dragging in and destroying several Scarran and Peacekeeper ships, then the nearby planet. He informs the increasingly stunned and horrified onlookers that this single wormhole weapon will continue doubling in size until it destroys not only the solar system and then the entire rest of the galaxy, but the entire universe. He offers the two enemy fleets a choice: Commandant Grayza and a much reluctant Emperor Staleek finally agree to stand down and accept Eidelon mediation. Aeryn, unwilling to accept her son if it means losing Crichton, places their infant son beside Crichton in the hopes that might revive him , and he soon "awakens" and moves to proudly hug his son, as Aeryn is moved to tears at the sight. With a vast starscape in front of them on Moya, Crichton and Aeryn announce that they have chosen for their son a name that represents strength and courage: They show their son the vast starfield, hopeful that their son will never have to experience war, as Crichton proclaims that "This is your playground".
