Read on to learn more about possessive noun worksheets and how they can help your students learn more about possessive nouns. What Are Possessive Nouns? This concept usually confuses students, because words they are used to seeing as nouns are now not functioning in the same way. Explain it simply to them, showing them that these changed nouns are actually describing the relationship of a noun to something else. Because they are describing words now instead of a person, place, thing, or idea they are now adjectives. You can recognize a possessive noun by its special ending: Students often confuse these with plural nouns because they sound the same; however, that these two types of words have very different functions. However, the problem is really noticeable in the English classroom when students get lazy about using apostrophes. Sometimes, students know the difference between plural nouns and possessive nouns, but they are simply too lazy to write an apostrophe. Make sure to grade students down every time they do this so that they learn their lesson. Printable Exercise Here is a list of sentences with an option for circling the correct word. Have your students choose between possessive nouns and plural nouns and circle the right answer. Add more example sentences to the list if you wish. Another option is to have the student take the incorrect answer and make a new sentence that uses that option correctly. You might notice a few tricky options in there for your students to choose between. Correct their work, and see if you can notice any problems or patterns that they continue to make.
