Exhibitors must wear clean clothing and shoes or boot coverings to participate. Before handling the life-like bird model, exhibitors must sanitize their hands. After completing the show and returning to their home flocks, exhibitors should change their clothing and shoes before having any contact with their own birds. Interview Judging Members can demonstrate their knowledge of the breed characteristics of their own show birds, answer poultry management and industry questions, and discuss biosecurity protocols with the judge. Participants should bring a photo of their bird to help with breed evaluation. Broiler and Market Bird Auction Regulations These regulations are based on the processing facility used by the fair. Options for Fairs that Use U. There are several other facilities in Michigan with USDA approval for the slaughter of other species and poultry processing, but not poultry slaughter. This is considered Custom Exempt processing. The USDA allows Custom Exempt processed meat and poultry to be used for the use of the owner of the live animal, their immediate family and their non-paying guests. Once sold, the birds must be transported to the processor. Projects cannot be evaluated before they are sold as live birds and carcass evaluation is not permitted with this option unless the processing facility is maintaining control of the processed birds and the consumer is picking up the processed birds directly from the processor. Fairs interested in this option must complete the Food Establishment License Application. Box , Lansing, MI Check with your fair management to determine if your fair has already obtained this license in order to serve food on the grounds. If so, make sure the license contact informs the inspector that you plan to have processed birds on the grounds. In addition, some 4-H clubs may already have a license for food concessions. If so, processed birds can also be covered under this license by working with the inspector. If you have a concern prior to that, contact your area inspector. Live bird judging with a Food Establishment License Once a license has been obtained, birds can be transported to the processor and then back to the fairgrounds for sale. Birds can be evaluated as live animals at the fair and sold as processed birds. The processed birds regardless of having been evaluated or not can be sold through live or silent auctions held during the fair.
