Love to see how our goals are all sifting out and so individual. I still want to see your lists though. I like to see what others are reading, not only for possibilities for me, but to see the journey our minds have been on this year. How about breaking it into two or three posts? Just a suggestion, but it was a large task for me to get them all typed in and this is the wrong time of year to ask anyone to do large tasks! *Nick Hornby. A Long Way Down. To Amanda "The cure for unhappiness is happiness, I don't care what anyone says."
Elizabeth McCracken, Niagara Falls All Over Again.*

And you like mushrooms, I know that. I could eat them all day. I find it offensive. Before I went to prison, I used to wake up in the morning and the tabloid scum were waiting outside the front door. I had crisis meetings with agents and managers and TV executives. It seemed impossible that there was anyone in Britain uninterested in what I had done, mostly because I lived in a world where it was the only thing that seemed to matter. Maybe Maureen lived on the roof, I thought. It would be easy to lose touch up there. As far as Maureen was concerned, these were her last few moments on earth. She wanted to get on with things. Buckle it your side of the railings. I climbed back over, we unbuckled the belt, placed the ladder in its original position. And I was just about to let Maureen jump in peace when this fucking lunatic came roaring at us. That was my mistake. I mean, that was my mistake if the idea was to kill myself. I could have just walked, quickly and quietly and calmly, to the place where Martin had cut through the wire, climbed the ladder and then jumped. And then he sort of kneeled on me and ground my face into that sort of gritty fake-Tarmac stuff they put on the tops of buildings. Then I really did want to be dead. I never saw anything, really, until he was rubbing my nose in the dirt, and then I just saw dirt. But I knew what the two of them were doing up there the moment I got to the roof. And I said, How do you know that? And he went, Well have you? And I said, Yeah, I have. And he said, Shut up. So my motives were essentially selfish; nothing new there, as Cindy would tell you. She looked frightened, and then dawdled her way over to us. This would come as a shock to breakfast television presenters, of course, most of whom firmly believe that people think about nothing else but breakfast, lunch and dinner. I have no idea, but at that point in the proceedings I had accepted the reality of our situation: And at that precise moment of acceptance, we three became four. There was a polite cough, and when we turned round to look, we saw a tall, good-looking, long-haired man, maybe ten years younger than me, holding a crash helmet under one arm and one of those big insulated bags in the other. Or serve you in shops, or take your money on the bus. Indians and West Indians, lots of Australians in the hospital where they see Matty, but no Americans. So we probably thought he was a bit mad at first. That was the only explanation for him. He looked a bit mad, with that hair. We were still sitting on her, so her voice sounded funny. You fâ€™ listening to me? Am I gonna have to come over and make you listen? He stood up, and I stood up, and Jess stood up and brushed herself down and swore a lot. Then she stared at Martin. The one who slept with the fifteen-year-old. Martin Sharp was sitting on my head. I read about him. No one in the US has ever heard of you. She leaned over, grabbed his bag and took out the pizza boxes. Then she opened the boxes and started poking the pizzas. Wanting to die seems like it might be a part of being alive. You were gonna kill yourself? I read the fuck out of every book I can get my hands on. Well, OK, we are losers by definition, because delivering pizzas is a job for losers. In fact, even with the Faulkner and Dickens, I was probably the dumbest out of all the guys at work, or at least the worst educated. Or an Italian guy, or a Spanish guy, or even like a fucking Finnish guy or whatever. OK, so my band, we put on the best live shows you could ever see in a bar, and we made two albums, which a lot of critics and not many real people liked. But having talent is never enough to make us happy, is it? Well, fucking right on, Oscar. My fingernails were all worn away, and the tips of my fingers were shredded up. With the band gone, the only room I had left for self-expression was in checking out of my unreal life: I was going to fly off that fucking roof like Superman. Some dead people, people who were too sensitive to live: But indulge me anyway: Sensitive people find it harder to stick around. So it was real shocking to discover that Maureen, Jess and Martin Sharp were about to take the Vincent Van Gogh route out of this world. It was invented for people like Virginia Woolf and Nick Drake. Suicide was supposed to be cool. It was my own stupid fault. I should have picked a classier dateâ€™like March 28th, when Virginia Woolf took her walk into the river, or Nick Drake November 25th. If anybody had been on the roof on either of those nights, the chances are they would have been like-minded souls, rather than hopeless fuck-ups who had somehow persuaded themselves that the end of a calendar year is in any way significant. My plan was to wander to the top, take a look around to get my bearings, go back down to deliver the pizzas and then Do It. And suddenly there I was with three potential suicides munching the pizzas I was supposed to deliver and staring at me. They were apparently expecting some kind of Gettysburg address about why their damaged and pointless lives were worth living. A small, good thing on a night like this. Why half an hour? And what was supposed to happen then? Looks to me like things were getting undignified up here. It was inedible, maybe even poisonous. Jess glared at me. Jess was saying that as long as we were on the rooftop, we were all anarchists. No agreements were binding, no rules applied. We could rape and murder each other and no one would pay any attention. There were approximately twenty-eight minutes of our time out remaining. Jess A long time ago, when I was eight or nine, I saw this programme on telly about the history of the Beatles. I probably told her I did mind, though. I probably made a fuss and pissed her off. Anyway, when Ringo joined, you sort of felt this little shiver, because that was it, then, that was the four of them, and they were ready to go off and be the most famous group in history. He was more like Paul. Thinking about it, maybe we were more like another group with four people in it. So I was like, Maybe we should talk, and Martin goes, What, share our pain? And after that little fluffle of activity we sat there puffing and blowing and hating each other for a bit. Your experiences are delivering pizzas. And JJ goes, Well, your experiences, then, not mine. And Martin just goes, Were you going to jump with the pizzas? Because someone ordered those. There was, as you can tell, a lot of, like, badness in the air. So I tried again. No need for pain-sharing. Because it might be interesting. We might learn something. We might see a way out, kind of thing. And I have to admit I had a sort of plan.

Besides, it gives me a reason to start using a ratings system for all those who, like me, prefer a user friendly precis option in their media reviews: Dunk at will and repeatedly. You might want to own this. It adequately mimics the peach salsa experience, but that very special something is missing. Borrow this at least. If you must, crane your neck briefly to take notice of this, as you would a car wreck on the highway. Avoid this and warn your friends to avoid this. Now for this issues reviews. So, now, here I am again, finally, to share a few tidbits of musical enthusiasm with you. Things you may not have known, or thought you needed to know, about Ben Kweller: What can we gather from these facts? Well, we could guess that in those first six years with Radish, he was either biding his time, or learning his pop song craft. His voice and lyrics are sincere, and he has that wit and that grasp of loud guitars and rocking beats that make this one irresistible and hard to lump in with, say Third Eye Blind or something. Also taking up space in my CD player recently is the spacey, not wholly expected album from Wilco. I was watching early morning TV, and a local station was doing a remote with some Boy Scouts who were volunteering by handing out free coffee to motorists at a local rest stop off the highway. While they were there, the scouts began to decommission a flag on camera. Now, the reporter who was there with them did ask them to explain for the folks at home what they were doing, which the scoutleader did as the boys carefully removed the stripes, folded the flag and burned it. Incidentally, what do you think happened at that TV station? A bunch of idiots had a knee jerk reaction to the burning of a flag on television, and the anchors had to come back on the next break and re-explain slowly this time what the hell was going on before. The Scoutmaster was calmly explained again, too. Boy Scouts burning the flag. The song ends with scary haunted sounding electronic noises, and a fragmenting fade out. Yankee Hotel Foxtrot is pretty damn brilliant. See you next time. I do offer this slight disclaimer, however: We do too have a metroplex. This movie will tell the full "origin" story of these kindergarten crimefighters, featuring a showdown with their enemy Mojo Jojo and his army of super monkeys. Personally, I believe it will at least be worth matinee prices. Oh, but those noisy kids But then again, what else were you going to watch July 4th weekend? Men in Black 2? Well, I guess you could probably do worse. Tommy Lee Jones rejoins Will Smith for more alien head-busting and mind-erasing. Count on attempts at family-friendly hijinks from this one, and not much more. Also that weekend in limited release is a comedy, The War Effort. Unknown writer and director. Looks like an interesting indie. Smells like an interesting indie. Tastes like an interesting indie. To further complicate matters, Lone Wolf and Cub a. Wolf and Baby Carriage was itself a popular series of Japanese films. The story is about a hit man who seeks vengeance after his wife and son are murdered. And also on that date wait for it Crocodile Hunter: Hey, if the Powerpuff Girls could break out of basic cable and onto the big screen, well, then this will probably really suck. Also on July 12th in, Lord help us, limited release are: In fact, skip this and go rent Ghost World. Expand yer mind already. At the same time, Jack Ryan gets back into a Russian Submarine only not quite. Also that weekend, an E. White character gets sequelized. Fox and Nathan Lane, respectively set out to help a friend. There is, however, hope in the case of Austin Powers in Goldmember, that this franchise has some silly, funny life in it. Myers, Zoolander and Undercover Brother are knocking. Or, better yet, chump your toddler off on an appropriately responsible sitter while you go looking for the nearest showing of About A Boy, which will hopefully still be playing by then. The romance starts when the two meet in a gay bar. Hmm I smell indie again, and probably limited release at that. The major release of the following weekend August 2nd will probably be M. Night Shyamalan Signs starring Mel Gibson as a reverend in Bucks County, PA who finds huge crop circles on his farm, and finds his faith tested as he investigates the mystery behind them. This film also features Joaquin Phoenix brother of the late River , Rory Culkin brother of Macaulay and Abigail Breslin probably no relation to Jimmy, but you never know. It happens every once in a while with Dana Carvey movies. The Master of Disguise opens on that same date. Four other movies open on August 2nd in limited release: The screenplay is based on a short story by Truman Capote, and tells the story of a con artist and a teenage love triangle in small town Alabama. So why, you may ask, the limited release treatment here? Well, it turns out it was shot in just 18 days and Soderbergh via Premiere magazine describes it as "the mutant child of Scenes from a Marriage and Day for Night- shot like an episode of Cops. Sounds like quite the change from that rat pack remake thang he just did. The story takes place in the film industry, dealing with seven characters who interact at different times. Kieran Culkin appears as Igby, with his brother Rory playing his younger self. August 7th will see the release of Spy Kids 2: The Island of Lost Dreams. The principles Antonio Banderas, Carla Gugino, Alexa Vega and Daryl Sabara return in another family friendly spy adventure, with other cast of interest to those above 8 years of age in the audience: You were expecting maybe James Edward Olmos? In limited release that day again, in Hartford, who knows when? This fact alone has me interested. Vin Diesel stars as "an extreme sports athlete" recruited by our fine government as a secret agent in order to avoid prison for bungee jumping off of a car he drove over a bridge, or some such. Those kids getting hassled by cops for skateboarding on the sidewalk will be green with envy. Has it been that many? Here, he plays an old, tired and retired FBI director who gets involved in the case of a disappearance that may involve a long sought after serial killer who eluded his grasp during his career. With Clint playing retirees called back into action in a number of his recent movies most recently Space Cowboys , is he likely to retire from making movies anytime soon? He struggles to cover it up one week before his wedding. If I pay to see this, I may merely sue. Only one notable detail from IMDb: This tells me some action may be involved. These four limited releases start August 9th as well: Wacky antics en ah, skip it. The story of Tony Wilson, man behind British pop institutions like the Hacienda Club and Factory Records, as told here, has many parallels to the American Studio 54 story. But chiefly figuring in this movie according to the buzz: And, finally that weekend, Iranian import Raye makhfi aka Secret Ballot. Sort of like Florida with less retirees, more sand and more burkhas. No Dogs Allowed will probably be in limited release a few days later on August 12th. August 15th brings the horror thriller No Tomorrow, from director Matt Irvine. Whether you pay to see it first run or wait for video, one thing remains unavoidable: Forget waiting for video! Murphy is the titular Nash, an outer space nightclub owner struggling to keep his little business out of the hands of the space mafia. Andrew Niccol, the director and writer of Gattaca brings us Simone on that date. Drei Sterne aka Mostly Martha opens on the same date, in you guessed it limited release. Likewise in limited release on August 16th is Swimfan. If you must watch it, fast forward to his musical numbers. So, fear not, Hartford! Limited is not always a dirty word though I think the anticipated success of Insomnia may have had something to do with the improved distribution.
