

Chapter 1 : University of Roehampton to Putney Bridge Station - 3 ways to travel

Putney is a constituency created in represented in the House of Commons of the UK Parliament since by Justine Greening of the Conservative Party.

Etymology[edit] The Roe in Roehampton is thought to refer to the large number of rooks that still inhabit the area. Description[edit] Roehampton emerged as a favoured residential suburb of the 18th and 19th centuries following the opening of Putney Bridge in and the development of a number of large private estates from which several of the original houses survive. Capability Brown is reputed to have laid out the grounds. Dover House was demolished for the new estate, but Putney Park House remains. The common characteristic of the LCC cottage estates is picturesque housing influenced by the Arts and Crafts style. It was the intention at Dover House Estate to create housing in groups that overlooked or had access to open space, to provide a sense of intimacy and individuality, and the estate was laid out with communal green spaces. Allotments were also provided in three backland areas behind houses, two of which remain, the third subsequently infilled by housing. Some of the many high-rise blocks which are part of the large Alton Estate The notable Alton Estate , one of the largest council estates in the UK, occupies an extensive swathe of land west of Roehampton village and runs between the Roehampton Lane through-road and Richmond Park Golf Courses, as can be seen on the map above. The estate is renowned for its mix of low and high-rise modernist architecture consisting of Alton East styled a subtle Scandinavian -influenced vernacular and its slightly later brutalist counterpart: The installation and construction of a pedestrian entrance to Richmond Park from the Alton Estate was secured by Justine Greening MP for the Putney constituency , which includes Roehampton in although it has not yet materialised. The estate is now part of a regeneration scheme with a number of government initiatives such as SureStart helping to tackle issues of poverty and social exclusion. Roehampton was originally a village which evolved as a popular residential area for the wealthy within easy reach of London. It is now being developed into private flats. Parkstead House was built in by the second Earl of Bessborough, and was the home of the socialite Caroline Lamb before being acquired in for use as a seminary by the Jesuits and renamed Manresa House. Gerard Manley Hopkins , the Jesuit poet, lived there. Many other 18th century aristocratic summer villas were set in parkland near Richmond Park and Putney Heath. Much of the old village of Roehampton still remains dominated by large detached houses. An old watering trough for Victorian carriage-horses exists at the junction of Medfield Street and Roehampton Lane. Apart from education other notable institutions based here include: Roehampton has long been an exclusive London address. The application was due to be considered in February Furthermore, Roehampton is an important location within H. The Flying Stage at Roehampton is the scene for a major battle within the plot.
