In this lesson, students investigate chronic diseases and design interactive games that could help children with these diseases understand and manage their illnesses.

As a former resident of Wooville I lived in beautiful Shit Creek, the Worried Well subdivision, I am obsessed with what goes on in these quacks heads. Are they exaggerated versions of what I used to be, haunted by low-grade, gnawing, existential angst and fear of illness, or do they suffer from a clinically identifiable mental condition? My worldview was changed through experiencing the deaths of several key people in my life. I woke up from my magical thinking as a result of several factors, but mostly these experiences of passing. Death turned out to be just another event in life, filled with a terrible beauty as my loved ones came to terms with and accepted their fates. I was going to wonder if going through cancer would change someone like Robert O. I think I can guess the answer. It really upsets me when people are fooled by quackery like this, while the author rakes in millions selling his books. It works easily and consistently: Seeing otherwise intelligent human beings get suckered in by trash like Young is very disheartening. While I was in the chair waiting for my mouth to numb, he showed me a video of an "amazing breakthrough" in Japan, which consisted of a tour through a colon that was liberally coated in slimy, ropey sludge photoshop, anyone? They claimed everyone who had a western, acid diet had a colon like this. It did seem a tad strange to show a gross colon to a dental patient with an open mouth and queazy stomach. Your last paragraph 18 supports my Mathematical Theory of Woo Complexity vs. Its dreadful, polluting V-8 has been replaced and now it runs on the tears of ear cndlers and revenge. But seriously, back in the day, I worked with many Woomeisters and they were a mixed bag. Most of them were sincere and poorly educated in critical thinking and the sciences. Some were fearful and wishful thinkers and some were just charlatans and at least one had Borderline Personality Disorder. I often am asked what would have changed my mind back then, and I think the only answer is "nothing. It took what it took for me to break free and that was about ten years in the making. That was just my process, and even though I ignored and belittled contrary information, I saw it. The info got in and was instrumental in my own process of waking up to the real world. They also have to keep adding on new coats of paint onto rotten old ideas to keep their marks from noticing the stink. This adds more incentive to create the illusion of change by reshuffling their jargon. It really irritates me that elsewhere they get away with demonstrating a symptomatic mentality and yet claiming science-based medicine only treats symptoms. These people seem to think humans are like toasters: One dial and one switch that determine the outcome. Just turn down the acidity dial. Turn it down more. Just keep going at it. Good health is just one easy dial turn away! It really is that simple! Lord Draconis Zeneca will know about this! An hilarious example of woo-speak involves le Grand Woo- Meister himself first using "scientific language" to introduce the woo and then translating it into "lay language" so that his audience can understand it! How cargo cult is that! As if his own paucity of verbal ability reflects any achievement in comprehending scientific terminology. The ability to do this requires not only an ignorance of science, but also one of history. They insist that a "healthy diet" will not just cure, but prevent all disease. They say that all disorders are caused by stress, and creating a completely "equal" society will eliminate stress, and, therefore, disease. Personally, I was also ill at ease about some developments within my own denomination and felt a need to learn more about the Christian church before it split into its Eastern and Western parts nearly 1, years ago.

Defense mechanisms are one way of looking at how people distance themselves from a full awareness of unpleasant thoughts, feelings and behaviors. Psychologists have categorized defense mechanisms based upon how primitive they are. The more primitive a defense mechanism, the less effective it works for a person over the long-term. However, more primitive defense mechanisms are usually very effective short-term, and hence are favored by many people and children especially when such primitive defense mechanisms are first learned. Some types of psychotherapy can help a person become aware of what defense mechanisms they are using, how effective they are, and how to use less primitive and more effective mechanisms in the future.

Primitive Defense Mechanisms

1. Denial Denial is the refusal to accept reality or fact, acting as if a painful event, thought or feeling did not exist. It is considered one of the most primitive of the defense mechanisms because it is characteristic of early childhood development. For instance, a person who is a functioning alcoholic will often simply deny they have a drinking problem, pointing to how well they function in their job and relationships.

Regression Regression is the reversion to an earlier stage of development in the face of unacceptable thoughts or impulses. For an example an adolescent who is overwhelmed with fear, anger and growing sexual impulses might become clingy and start exhibiting earlier childhood behaviors he has long since overcome, such as bedwetting. An adult may regress when under a great deal of stress, refusing to leave their bed and engage in normal, everyday activities.

Acting Out Acting Out is performing an extreme behavior in order to express thoughts or feelings the person feels incapable of otherwise expressing. When a person acts out, it can act as a pressure release, and often helps the individual feel calmer and peaceful once again. Self-injury may also be a form of acting-out, expressing in physical pain what one cannot stand to feel emotionally. A person who dissociates often loses track of time or themselves and their usual thought processes and memories. People who have a history of any kind of childhood abuse often suffer from some form of dissociation. People who use dissociation often have a disconnected view of themselves in their world. Time and their own self-image may not flow continuously, as it does for most people.

Compartmentalization Compartmentalization is a lesser form of dissociation, wherein parts of oneself are separated from awareness of other parts and behaving as if one had separate sets of values. An example might be an honest person who cheats on their income tax return and keeps their two value systems distinct and un-integrated while remaining unconscious of the cognitive dissonance. Projection is used especially when the thoughts are considered unacceptable for the person to express, or they feel completely ill at ease with having them. For example, a spouse may be angry at their significant other for not listening, when in fact it is the angry spouse who does not listen.

Reaction Formation Reaction Formation is the converting of unwanted or dangerous thoughts, feelings or impulses into their opposites. For instance, a woman who is very angry with her boss and would like to quit her job may instead be overly kind and generous toward her boss and express a desire to keep working there forever. She is incapable of expressing the negative emotions of anger and unhappiness with her job, and instead becomes overly kind to publicly demonstrate her lack of anger and unhappiness.
