Ancestry and arrival in Scotland[edit] Locations relating to the life and times of Walter. Walter was a member of the Fitz Alan family. Previous to this, Alan had acted as steward to the bishops of Dol in Brittany. He held North Stoke , north of Arundel , by way of a grant from his brother, William. As such, it is probable that Walter possessed a degree of experience in the profession. Clydesdale and South Kyle were royal lordships, whilst Cunningham was a Morville lordship. To such kings, royal authority depended upon their ability to give away territories in the peripheries of the realm. The most important of these mid-century colonial establishments were: He also granted Walter West Partick , Inchinnan , Stenton , Hassenden, Legerwood and Birkenside , as well as a toft with twenty acres in every burgh and demesne in the realm. For this grant, Walter owed his sovereign the service of five knights. Walter appears to have been a devotee of this English Cluniac priory. Walter was a benefactor of Melrose Abbey, and granted this religious house the lands of Mauchline in Ayrshire. There is reason to suspect that Walter was amongst the Scots who took part in the campaign to liberate Lisbon from the Moors. Walter founded the original priory in about Renfrew may well have served as the caput of the Strathgryfe group of holdings held by Walter, [88] and could have been the main caput of all his holdings. For example, Walter granted this religious house a tithes from all his lands excepting North Kyle. The fact that he granted away only one piece of land in North Kyle€”as opposed to his extensive donations elsewhere€”suggests that North Kyle was his largest block of his own demesne. If so, it could indicate that Walter and his dependants were purposely settled in the west to take advantage of this linguistic affiliation. As such, it may have been hoped that such incoming settlers would possess a degree of legitimacy from the natives as fellow Britons. The device displays a mounted knight with a shield , lance , and pennon. Cecilia [] and Maud. Walter may have campaigned with the king on the Continent. Walter witnessed an act by Malcolm at Les Andelys in Normandy. This charter appears to reveal that Walter was one the Scottish barons who accompanied the king upon the English campaign against the French at Toulouse in This record is the only known act of the king on the Continent. Upon his return, the king was forced to confront an attempted coup at Perth. As such, Walter may have sought written confirmation of his rights in light of the external threats that faced the Scottish Crown. Walter served as steward until his death [] in There is no evidence that this man married into a native Welsh family. Alternately, the steward in question could well have been either Alguine [35] or his son. In later generations, the personal name James became popular within the family. By the end of the nineteenth-century, no trace of the mound could be found. The former name is of Breton origin.

Census (reels) These microfilm records from the National Archives were placed on the Internet Archive by the Allen County Library Genealogy Center.

In lieu of an abstract, here is a brief excerpt of the content: Hamilton bio During the secession crisis in late and early , five states of the lower South appointed commissioners to travel to the other slave states with the purpose of swaying their fellow Southerners to leave the Union and form a Southern Confederacy. Mississippi, Alabama, South Carolina, Georgia, and Louisiana appointed a total of fifty-five commissioners who journeyed to the farthest reaches of the South between December and April However, they were not, for the most part, the famous names of the secessionist movement. Indeed, outside of their home states they were rather obscure figures. Most of the commissioners were lawyers, judges, doctors, newspaper editors, farmers, and planters. The vast majority of them had modest reputations as politicians, and most were recognized for possessing above average oratorical skills. These attributes qualified them for their role as secession commissioners. They delivered speeches to large crowds whenever possible and wrote letters to governors and state legislators. Their message was clear, their resolve immense. When they set out to [End Page] their assigned states in late and early , they carried with them the seeds of secession, the formation of a new Southern Confederacy, and ultimately civil war. Despite the important role that the secession commissioners were expected to play during the secession crisis of , little has been written about them. Indeed, only two major scholarly works have been produced. As a result, Alabama sensed that it would not be alone in seceding from the Union and could count on allies in the event of coercion by the new administration in Washington. James Martin Calhoun, the commissioner sent by Alabama was given only slight mention by Durward Long, and although Dew covered forty-one of the fifty-five commissioners, he examined only a single commissioner to Texas, John McQueen from South Carolina. The purpose is not to argue that these emissaries for secession had a major role in convincing Texas to leave the Union because evidence indicates that sentiment in favor of disunion controlled the Lone Star State well before they arrived. Instead, the focus of this study is an analysis of the arguments utilized by the commissioners as they sought to accomplish their mission to Texas. Did they attempt to foster [End Page] a nascent sense of Confederate nationalism by arguing that Texas would be a key part of a new Southern nation, or did they emphasize the need for secession in order to You are not currently authenticated.
