History[edit] From until , the minor civil divisions were districts and towns. In , the Province of Georgia was divided into eight parishes, and another four parishes were partitioned in ; in , the original eight counties of the state were created. Georgia has the second largest number of counties of any state in the United States , following Texas , which has counties. However, about 25 counties in Georgia were created in the first quarter of the 20th century, after the use of the railroad , automobile , truck, and bus had become possible. The last new county to be established in Georgia was Peach County , established in . The proliferation of counties in Georgia led to multiple state constitutional amendments attempting to establish a limit on the number of counties in the state. The most recent such amendment, ratified in , limited the number to counties, although there had been counties from to . In a very rare consolidation of counties, both Campbell County and Milton County were annexed into Fulton County in as a financial move during the Great Depression , since those two county governments were nearly bankrupt. Fulton County contains Atlanta , and it was thought that tax revenues from Atlanta and its suburbs would help to support the rural areas of the discarded counties, which had very little tax income of their own—mostly from property taxes on farms and forests, which did not amount to much. Georgia is the only state which still allows sole commissioner county government. Changed names of counties[edit] A few counties in Georgia have had their names changed. Jasper County was originally named "Randolph County". Later, the present-day Randolph County was founded. Defunct counties[edit] St. Phillip, Christ Church, St. Paul parishes were all dissolved in with the establishment of the charter counties. Formed out of disputed Yazoo lands in present-day Mississippi; dissolved in Campbell — Formed from Carroll and Coweta in , half northwest of Chattahoochee River became Douglas in , remainder was merged into southwest Fulton in . Formed from northeast Cobb , southeast Cherokee , and southwest Forsyth in and later northern DeKalb , was merged into north Fulton in . There was a previous Walton County in Georgia, which was actually located in what is now western North Carolina. A brief skirmish, the so-called Walton War , was fought between North Carolina and Georgia in , before Georgia relinquished its claim on that area after the survey of Ellicott Rock.
