Geography of Chicago The city of Chicago lies in the Chicago Plain, a flat and broad area characterized by little topographical relief. The few low hills are sand ridges. North of the Chicago Plain, steep bluffs and ravines run alongside Lake Michigan. Along the southern shore of the Chicago Plain, sand dunes run alongside the lake. Surrounding the low plain are bands of moraines in the south and west suburbs. These areas are higher and hillier than the Chicago Plain. A continental divide , separating the Mississippi River watershed from that of the Great Lakes and Saint Lawrence River , runs through the Chicago area. The five most common tree species are buckthorn , green ash , boxelder , black cherry , and American elm. These resources perform important functions in carbon storage, water recycling, and energy saving. Downtown Chicago is at the far left by the lake in the photo. As of the Census, the metropolitan area had a population of 9,, The population density was 1, per square mile. The racial makeup was Other ethnic groups such as Native Americans and Pacific Islanders made up just 2. Aurora, Elgin, Joliet, and Naperville are noteworthy for being four of the few boomburbs outside the Sun Belt , West Coast and Mountain States regions, and exurban Kendall County ranked as the fastest-growing county among counties with a population greater than 10, in the United States between the years and However, there is a major exception to this. According to the U. Census, poverty rates of the largest counties from least poverty to most are as follows: In an in-depth historical analysis, Keating , examined the origins of settlements that by had become suburbs or city neighborhoods of the Chicago metropolitan area. Although relations between the different settlement types were at times contentious, there also was cooperation in such undertakings as the construction of high schools. Population[edit] As the Chicago metropolitan area has grown, more counties have been partly or totally assimilated with the taking of each decennial census.
