Leiter, Summary description of the collection, Description of some materials related to this collection, Arrangement of the collection, Detailed description of archival series in the collection, List of online catalog headings about the collection, List of contents of the collection. After moving to Chicago in , Levi Leiter met Marshall Field while both were employed as clerks for Cooley, Wadsworth and Company, a wholesale drapery house in which they soon became partners. In they sold their interest to John V. Farwell and purchased controlling interest in a dry goods firm founded by Potter Palmer, which became the department store known as Field, Palmer and Leiter. Palmer retired in , and the name was changed to Field, Leiter and Company. Field was the merchandiser, and Leiter specialized in credit and finance. Levi Leiter also began investing in land and buildings, and in sold his share of the dry goods business to Marshall Field. In addition, he owned acres of coal lands in Franklin and Williamson counties in southern Illinois, half interest in 13, acres of ranch lands in Wyoming, mine claims in several western states. An active promoter of Chicago business and philanthropic interests, Leiter served as director of the Chicago Relief and Aid Society from to , helped fund the erection of a new Chicago Historical Society building in , helped to organize the Commercial Club in , and became the second president of the Art Institute of Chicago in . They had one son, Joseph, and three daughters: The Leiters spent much of their time at homes in Washington, D. He attended school at St. Joseph Leiter is known for his attempt to corner the wheat market in . His father personally covered the debts incurred. Undaunted, Joseph soon became involved in a combine of Chicago street railways, a milk trust, and a Canadian meat trust. He also was given specific control of the coal lands in southern Illinois. Leiter married Juliette Williams in , and they had three children: Joseph Leiter received considerable publicity in the s because of a lawsuit claiming mismanagement of the estate brought against him by one of his sisters, Lady Suffolk, and by Lord Curzon, the husband of another sister who had died in . Estate income had dwindled, and Leiter, with the approval of his third sister Nancy Campbell, had used trust monies to develop certain properties in order to increase their income potential. Leiter used estate money to buy land adjacent to the coal property in Zeigler Ill. He also bought a lake in Wyoming, hoping to irrigate estate lands and make them profitable and to sell water to neighboring ranches. These projects were not very successful. The Cook County Superior Court ruled that Leiter had acted in good faith in managing the estate and refused to remove him as trustee although he was required to pay back a large sum of money to the estate for investments he had made without proper authority. The ruling was upheld on appeal. Following settlement of the suit in , both Leiter and Lady Suffolk resigned as trustees, leaving the management of the estate to non-family members. He died in Chicago on April 11, , of complications resulting from a cold he caught while attending races in New Orleans. History of the estate of L. The income was to be divided between his wife and children in their lifetimes, and when the last of his children died, the principal was to be divided among his heirs. Properties held by Levi Leiter at the time of his death were kept basically intact under the estate, although some were sold and others purchased from time to time to maintain the value of the trust. After eight years of litigation concerning the management of the estate, Joseph Leiter retired as trustee in . At that point the operation of the estate was turned over to non-family agents. The last surviving child of Levi Leiter, Lady Suffolk, died in , and a liquidation trust was set up to dispose of the properties of the estate, with the proceeds going to the living descendants. The estate offices closed in . Summary description of the collection: The papers and records of Levi Leiter, Joseph Leiter, and the Leiter estate include correspondence, account books, financial statements, minutes of meetings of the estate trustees, real estate accounts including plat maps, deeds, leases, appraisal reports, and building maintenance records, and records of investments in stocks, bonds, mines, and other business ventures. Records cover the period from to although the main body of the collection documents the operation of the Leiter estate from to the s. They concern mainly the management of properties that had been acquired by Levi Leiter and managed by his estate after his death. The papers of Levi and Joseph Leiter relate almost entirely to these business dealings and seldom touch on other matters. Tanner, newly elected Republican Governor of Illinois. Leiter is extremely candid in writing to Tanner of political dealings as well as of his nation-wide financial interests. Leiter also refers to the New York financier J. Olds was a pioneer in mass production in the automobile industry. Born in Ohio, his family moved to Lansing when Olds was His father, Pliny F. Olds, established a foundry and machine shop in which Olds bought a part interest in During the s Olds devoted many hours to perfecting a lightweight internal combustion vehicle. The company returned to Lansing and produced the curved-dash car exclusively. In the first year of production cars were produced and sold. By , were sold. He was chairman of the board from to During the later years of his life, Olds built financial security for his family and himself in stocks, bonds and real estate. Olds was also a philanthropist, donating to a wide variety of social and moral reform societies. A businessman of widely varied interests, R. Olds assumed a managerial involvement in automobile manufacture, peat mining, 27 industries, and real estate, and invested in a number of other areas. The bulk of this collection is related to these investments. The Bancroft Peat Company was established near the Michigan town of this name to produce a cheap fuel. High costs and failure to develop a market destroyed this enterprise. The peat land was converted to peppermint production. When this venture also proved unprofitable it was sold. The correspondence on the operation is very complete, and begins on a note of extreme optimism. Olds eventually became disenchanted with the venture and ran an independent mine assay which showed that the mine could never be a paying proposition. He subsequently sold his investment at what must have been a substantial loss. Olds papers are divided into two sections. Included are correspondence series of Olds Motor Works and REO and several small companies that Olds either owned or was the major stockholder. There is also a correspondence series between Olds and various stockbrokers and bankers who wished to interest Olds in an investment plan. The correspondence on "Chicago Property" relates to a large apartment building which Olds owned. Olds attempted in April-May of to interest the Defense Department in establishing a shipyard there to construct a "wooden fleet".
